Screw sleep. The noisy machinery will probably be back before too long, anyway. They're cutting back trees/cutting down trees in my neighborhood for the first time in like 8 or so years, to keep them off the power lines or from being dangerous to the power lines. It was definitely needed. And they did it early at our house because the dumb asses who used to live here didn't know the concept of trees growing because they planted a bunch of trees underneath the power lines. Oh, and they planted them as a fence of sorts along the front WAY TOO DAMN CLOSE to each other. So a section of them needed to be cut off because they were literally burning from the lines rubbing against them in the wind. Saw it smoking once, too. And you could see burned areas on it

When I originally listened to this version many, many years ago, I didn't like it. My mom was listening to it or something and I was like "Eugh", and went back to the Johnny Cash version. But now I like both. It's amazing what a little music exploration can get you into with stuff that you didn't used to like. Any form of death metal or black metal, or hell, a lot of metal except a lot of Mike Patton stuff I grew up on when I was younger in general, I wouldn't like. Now one of my all-time favorite albums is a black metal album. And lots of metal are my favorites. It feels really nice actually, to like so much, and have my major music exploration (It's pretty much a hobby to me) change my tastes to such a varied level
