I believe it is as per conventions of war to mark humanitarian buildings and trucks, etc. as such, not mark them as enemy combatant. I think whoever is driving is doing a war crime here.

Don't remind me of the Arma 3 community where a good 75% of the "milsim" communities are just civilian killing meme groups.

I'm just downloading arma 3. What group actually commit genocide for a reason? Second is there a Nato/UN civilian killing meme group? Is there a dynamic in the game where recruiting from the population as insurgent is easier after the fact of the crime? Is fighting in civilian attire weighted the same as genocide in arma?

Uhhhhhhhhhhhhh it really depends on what the scenario is, how well it was made, what kind of people you play with, who the Zeus is, what enemies you're against, and generally how you're feeling.

For example, you could have an op where you just drive ICBM carrying trucks into position and then fire at Pyrgos which the scenario has filled with civilians for the purpose of killing. Alternatively you could play something like antistasi that allows you to pretend to be a civilian and then open fire on whatever enemy factions you're fighting. Then.. then there's DRO. DRO doesn't care about war crimes and will happily spawn in armed civilians who only reveal themselves once you've killed all your enemies, and who will kill you and your team with pinpoint accuracy. Worse still is that DRO penalizes you for killing civvies that aren't armed, so you basically have to guess which civilians are bad and which ones are good. I've had a friend firebomb an entire village on DRO and it wasn't a pretty sight. We failed that mission from civilian casualties and had to withdraw in UN trucks that we stole.

Honestly just leave some guns next to the bodies of the acceptable casualties and they become armed combatants that engaged in asymmetrical warfare.

It's not easy having a Null level AI that can out think millions in a second. Doesn't help that we slaved all the other powerful AI to it in some dumb attempt to make a defensive fleet against the Centaurian menace.

Also we thought we could contain them through numbers.

It was uhhhh a Centaurian psyop we swear. Also moral, ethical, and rational concerns were kinda out the window when the Centaurians had overwhelming numerical superiority and also billions more people.

Also worth noting is that you would be spraying either ashes or centuries old bones in a bombed out graveyard somewhere on Novaya Rossiya which probably isn't looking all that great since the wars. I mean I'm not gonna say no but if their descendants survived the nuclear devastation of the Inner Sector then they may not be happy.
