"Now onto more pressing matters! Mister. Townies. Ah, sorry, Townes. Is it pronounced Towns...like the plural of — ah, nevermind. Let's see, a military caudillo, of sorts, in Pinks and Greens, what a familiar sight! I can relate to you, I guess. After some unfortunate lessons in taking unnecessary risks and underestimating an opponent, I have tried to fix protocol and maintain discipline among pilots on Earth. Being an iron-ass on the job is hardly an endearing thing, but it's necessary, as I'm sure you're aware. Things must run like clockwork, otherwise the gears break down. But now you're in the helm of a far more complex system, a political one, which doesn't just kill people as an intended purpose, how quaint. I'm so grateful I'm just an indirect policymaker.

We're both fish out of water too! Creatures of a realm where duplicity isn't useful all the time, compared to the life of politicians, where having two-faces is a constant thing. Filters and lies and promises and favors and all those little unwritten things that grant connections and leverages which are VERY grating. Especially when one is not a people person...our lives depends on that. I'd recommend devising some major mental barriers to keep things in order: chance has a thing of making chaos of the best of plans and you need a mask, for the public and for those natural-born wolves called statesmen....Also, do you know that LeMay guy by chance?

All these years, and the whole thing about a UFO crashing in Roswell? And aliens? It's true! All of it! I feel like a baka, my dudes! Oh, what do I think of Nova? Ahem..firstly, I am so stoked to learn that aliens do exist; and two, I have so many questions to ask Nova in person."

"But I am super jealous of the United States..why do they have an alien working for them and why don't Nova work for Japan? I mean, sure, my country produces too much hen...uh..certain entertainment, but it's not so bad. Nova doesn't look like she will be in good hands with the Americans, she should probably move to Japan; we're better at taking care of our own people and other peoples too. And we're damn good at it."

"From the outside, this Rikimaru person probably seems like the type you'd find on Reddit mods: self-centered, insufferable, stupid. But one should never underestimate what stupidity can accomplish... chaos caused by irrational, unstrategic, unsustainable foundations can be as lethal as anime protagonist levels of strategic calculations. I mean, this person is responsible for actual, violent riotings, you know, causing actual and measurable financial damages. Behind the cringe-worthy fashion and attitude that turns people into underestimating him (while also giving my generation's culture a bad name), younger Rikimaru isn't necessarily as different as any other torch-bearing Trumpist maniac. And, like them, the longer things go, the more unsustainable they become. His brother can rest easy, knowing that stubborn perseverance will lead to eventual victory condition."

"From childhood, I always admired Islam -as a case study of social norms- for its jack-awesome ability to control and boss around society as it wishes, whether for despicable or noble goals. But it's the people like the Mawlawi that sometimes makes me wish for the Emperor to come down from the sky with his Imperial Truth and purge off degeneracies such as this. The Mawlawi himself is a classic narco-dictator, no different if not worse than his predecessors, who appears and disappears throughout history, catastrophically hampering his people's potentials and will leave only minimum content in his Wikipedia page upon death. His rogue, North Korea-style mafia state meanwhile... well, to say that Islam isn't the most important factor in their existence would be... wrong. An ideology detached from real-world realities means that the rulers on top can do whatever he wants, as long as the completely irrelevant goals are being pursued. Amid a soon-to-be collapsing global environment, his short-sighted rule aimed only at preserving the newly found status quo thus condemns his people into an unsustainable state of eternal stagnation, completely unnecessary international isolation and unavoidable tragedy."

Ashton Klein. A 100 years old scientist, still directing and performing researches as the head of biological division in area X-14. Why he has so much spite? Did some old dude beat crap outta him, when he was young? Usually, bullies ain't that old... Anyway, he considers himself a genius and had confirmed this status, but he is an insufferable genius. Arrogant. Elitist. If we suddenly end up in conflict, this can be exploited and plans can be drafted around it. We all have a weakness to exploit, his is just visible. And trust me, we might end up in conflict, when he decides, that our existence is ""irrational" or whatever, and then justifies attacks on us using overly complicated scientific statistics. Which can also be used against him. Even most scientifically confirmed and reliable statistics can be published in a way, people will believe the opposite. And don't get me started on critical thinking... No matter, how well one is taught this skill, it just reduces to nothing, when emotions come to play.

Still, if we somehow manage to improve relations, we might, just might get some of the data on his impressive technology. Maybe even immortality... For all of us. So far, we are officially neutral to each other, but this can change both ways. Spymaster will soon bring some more data on him and his goals soon."-Shawn Bjornson

"Shawn Bjornson. I view him positively, we are both men that strive for the liberation of the individual. Although in different ways, yes. But still, we can find common ground when comes to a tyrant attempting to rob the individual of his fruits and to give to those who did nothing to earn it. In addition, we both believe that the individual should have the right to arm themselves and to ensure those that violate their rights are....sent to a better place, yes? Yes. Otherwise my only disagreement is that he has certain regulations that limit the individual's ability to experience true, unyielding, and absolute freedom."

I don't pretend to bother too much about the politics of this nature, other than letting them live as they see fit. I can agree on that, but that is unfortunately where I have to stop. Accusing your own blood brother of such a thing, causing damage to the wholly unrelated things - my dear fellow, and I hate to say this, there is a point where you became a terrorist, and you crossed that line. Such a shame, because you really could have pursued with your brother in other ways, which I'll admit is easier said than done, but what I envision is miles ahead of this terrible mess.

"Of course I did not forget about this individual who has insulted my diet, and including my mother in that insult, why should I? And what a hypocrite, going to lecture me on how I should rule my country when he is unable to do the simple task of sitting down and listening at his own meetings. Eccentric or not, a boy like him is not a person qualified for his station; deliberately allowing distractions to hinder him prevents anything getting done. It baffles me that the only leader in Sherechia made Daishin his assistant."

"An "eccentric" boy (Atkhal Daishin), a drug abuser who believes partying, drinking, and bedding prostitutes is a happy life (Shawn Bjornson), a Germanophobic lesbian (Fallen Albali), and much more. Am I surprised? No. Should I be? Also no. These are the kinds of people the Bible warned about: they are loveless, lovers of pleasure than lovers of God. It is sad but it is an obvious fact."

"Ooo, Chikao is a fiesty one. He's ready and willing to fight for representation for the LGB community. I can respect that a whole lot, compared to what I've seen with Humans who just complain, and do nothing to solve a problem in their society. You know...Chikao, if you are interested, give me a call, and WonderTech Industries will provide you with the services needed to make your dream come true. However, once that Prime Minister who unfortunately shares your blood is removed. We, of course, will need compensation. I look forward to that phone call, good day. "

Jasper leans on his aggressive side. Personally, I enjoy watching him battle his erstwhile allies-in-convenience. It's refreshing to see someone who has to watch his back and survive against all the odds. On the other hand I do not dislike his assertiveness. It's a welcome change from the usual strategy of just waiting for the right moment to strike.

"Our spymaster has yet to find any data on this mysterious leader, until then, any attempts to communicate and establish relations would be gambling. Fate will determine success or failure during this blind interaction. But I am gonna still try that anyway, and invite Aegalar to one of our festivities. There, we will get to know him better and try to establish trade and diplomatic relations. We have already made necessary preparations for entanglement with Diarcesia. So far, we are open to the relationships with this enigma dude and I am willing to talk and have a few drinks with him. My intuition says, his disposition would be friendly. Anyway, I'll ask spymaster to get more intel on him, gotta know him better."Overboss Shawn Bjornson

"Is it a common characteristic among these Alkdorians to be disingenuous opportunists? I have met every single one of them and I say this truly: not a single person among them is trying to be different from one another. All of them are shameless and uncaring of their actions and yet they are paranoid of each other's existence, most likely due to
