They called an amendment to the bill of rights a "second bill of rights" thanks to the significance placed on its passage.

Article 2 of the first chapter of their constitution prohibits discrimination of any kind, including political ideology.

It then discriminates on the basis of political ideology.

It then says that discriminating on the basis of political ideology is wrong.

While its legal code is named Sharia, it is by no means even remotely alike to the actual Islamic jurisprudence and religious law. For one thing, women are constitutionally similar to men, which goes against every aspect of Islamic fiqh where the two sexes are concerned.

I suggest you read the Prophet PBUH's last sermon. It clearly summarizes the standing of women according to Islam. And maybe read the Qur'an. We don't care about sectarian versions of fiqh that are created to serve political agendas.

The Jamesian Republic is an allegory for the United States of America. It has 48 states like the USA did from 1912-1959 and the Stars and Stripes mean the same thing like they do in Real Life.

"The Jamesian Republics Independence Day takes place on September 24th. The Independence Proclamation was written by the Third President of the Republic and was ratified in 1791... wait "Third" President? If they were still in the colonial stage why were they already forming a government? were their version of the British a lot more liberal?"

William Stockbridge later became President decades later. The official government was not set up yet. At this point it was The Jamesian National congress which is like the Continental Congress in our world.

In name scheme, yes. I'd actually say they're more Assyrians right now, with a bit of Chinese Mandate of Heaven thrown in, but the lore isn't in a factbook, so you'd be justified for thinking that.

Their world is very similar to ours in the 1950s, except that Gran Colombia still exists, some minor States (i.e Tibet) are independent, and the continents and countries all have changed and improved names.
