Well, it depends on what the school's rules says, since we don't have a real "state exam" (we only give the schools some "guidelines" and then every school create it's own exam) and we don't have rules about how to behave if the student is caught cheating. In most of the cases, the school count the exam as non valid and the student is obligated to do the exam again. In some cases, however, the student can be punished with a suspension of 2 weeks or even the expulsion from the school

Probably getting swatted or on a list of its taken seriously. Likely imprisonment or death. Death threats against the Yankee Council aren't exactly good for stability.

Nothing will happen- throwing electronics into water wouldn't electrocute anyone, so whoever is in the pool would probably at worst be concerned about you throwing things into their pool which might've hit them. That's at worst a minor civilian endangerment which is a small fine but even so it's rarely enforced.

N/A as we're a monarchy, but all forms of graffiti are illegal and could land you six months in jail.

However, if you tried it on the Imperial Palace, then you'd be shot on sight by the Imperial Guards - Tangatarehua doesn't fuck around when it comes to the security of the Empress.

It depends on the socioeconomic conditions of who stole.

If it was a poor person going hungry, it's not a crime. The injured person can inform the police and the government would judge the need to refund, even if it is in the form of a tax cut for him.

If it was a person with conditions to buy, who stole the bread for futile reasons, 3 years without parole. The injured person can sue him and receive up to five times the amount lost.

Set fire to your own national flag.

Well, there are cars (I picked the no Cars policy just for the Environment stats) so the fine being:

₱250 on secondary roads (i.e main roads, streets, driveways)
₱10,000 on primary roads (i.e highways, avenue, boulevards)
₱35,000 on highway roads (i.e highways Kuiper Expressway, Larshavink Expressway, and Darmstadt Ringway)

For secondary roads, if you don't want a fine, you get either a 30 day sentence in jail, or 2 months of community service.

For primary AND highway roads, you get 4 months of jail, or 1 year of community service.

In my nation you won't be punished for contaminating the chocolate but for not contributing enough to the economy after no one buys the chocolate. The business will be shut down and all assets will be given to another chocolate company.
