I have a tab open to show the threads I participate in - "View your posts". Sidebar is... it's mostly the thing that attracts attention. More often bad than good.

Something I've noticed:

OP's who make threads with apps and then never actually review the applicants, instead just accepting everybody willynilly... I mean if you were gonna have the thread open to everybody and their grandmothers whyfor the app?

This is often combined with a "no one liners" rule which is not actually enforced.

People probably make one-liners due to the fear of getting ninja'd.

Oh my God, that reminds me of the time Sharifistan held one of those weird bride RP's and one of my friends (jokingly) submitted Astolfo. You know, the femboy from that one anime.

Getting ninja'd in F7? In my experience, that's the thing you should least be concerned about, to be honest. Just write something that isn't just your generic one-liner, and if you can make it be multiple paragraphs, good. Write your post, hit preview every now and then, and if you get ninja'd before you can post, rewrite your post. Trust me, it makes everyone happier, especially those who spend a fuckton of time writing their lore, because it makes them think that their stay in Forum 7 is much more worth it than it probably actually is. And I'm speaking from my own experience right here.

As for forum RP's? The concept of getting ninja'd, at least in ones that have a bare standard of quality, is pretty much non-existent. Write a lot of paragraphs, go full monke on what you're writing, as long as it abides by the RP's rules and quality standards. Does it matter if other people have posted before you have? It can, but most of the time, posts tend to have a few days of delay between them.

Overall, write, write, write! Even if you get ninja'd, it'll make good practice for when you have to write more lore for your nation.

Honestly I can't stop laughing when nation's pages always link low crime rates to "a capable police force and progressive social policies" even when the nation in question is a psychotic dictatorship- I have my doubts that police essentially being an internal army is a "progressive social policy"

In its defense, if I use Welfare vs Compliance vs Law Enforcement (I will assume that Welfare includes Social Policies), you will get a graph like this:

Show Spoiler

There are only 12000+ data points because I filtered it to only show nations under "Psychotic Dictatorship" category. For more complete set of data including other categories:

Which also shows that highlighted nations like above has absolutely no welfare spent. And if you look at apocalypse, it does say "Thanks to its Police Force", minus the Social Programs. So it's probably because you still have existent welfare (> 0).

Of course, NS stats can either be accurate or inaccurate and discarded depending on how you play your nation. As for myself, doing these types of analysis gives me life. ♥

Technically, the amount of graphs I have are kind of limitless, and yes, if I want to, I can do that as well. This is perhaps the most unusual graph I have been requested.

I have data for 300+ columns of stats, along with 200,000+ rows of nations, so... yeah, pretty huge data.

I might have heard of that one, and am actually going to add that into my existing data. Since it just needs the current NS Stats, I should be good. ♥

Here's another cliché, albeit quite a modern one: for God knows what reason whenever they roleplay one of these new civil wars in II they ALWAYS execute POW's in extreme or absurd numbers. Like it seems to me that the sole purpose of such RP's for them are the executions. Just recently in response to me sending like 6 planes to disable some infrastructure enemy player wrote that he captured more than 10K of my POW's, despite me having less than 500 men participating in the war. More over than that they never try to interrogate POW's, roleplay escapes (movie The Great Escape was pretty badass NGL), or try to get some information out of them, no, they ALWAYS execute them. I'm still wondering why.

The reasons civil wars drag on so long:

- Guerrilla warfare
- Foreign intervention

If one side in a modern civil war didn't know how to properly utilize guerrilla warfare if cornered then they're pretty screwed. Likewise, Syria, Libya and Yemen have lasted for so long due to foreign intervention, and the fact the federal government's central army is virtually nonexistent.

After all, there is a reason civil wars in the Information Era and the late Cold War often lasted decades, while those in the early Cold War and World Wars often only lasted a few years (i.e. the Spanish Civil War and the late phase (post-ww2) Chinese Civil War, although both have had resistance continuing for decades)

On the topic of the Chinese Civil War, civil wars with multiple intermission periods are also rare here on NS.

Usually summer civil wars end simply with a peace treaty and that's it. I can't even say how absurd that is...

Probably because I feel like, in all honesty, a lot of them are glorified versions of saying "hey NS decide if my nation should be communist, fascist or democratic."
