If I am reading this right, than in Orcish law an adulterer is to be put to death without any regard as to whether he is married or not, and thus the first man is within the law. A case could be made should he injury or kill his spouse, but since the spouse would belong to him and it was the spouse's responsibility to be loyal to him than he may go free regardless.

A military commander ordered the execution of civilians in a war that was overall victorious.

That is not a crime. As per common military doctrine in this world, citizens of a state or non-state actor waging war against the state are to be considered "non-military combatants", as they contribute to the enemy's economy, workforce, and manpower pool, and thus are targets for neutralisation; while not priority targets, eliminating them would overall be good for the war effort, so the said commander would be awarded for doing this, if anything.

Compensation for the destruction equivalent to the damage caused (idolatry exd.).

With a enforced national religion: Not following the national religion.

Without an enforced national religion: Being forced to work more time than agreed in the employee-employer contract.

We understand, that situation can require employee to work more than in contract. But in that case, overtime must be compensated at higher rate. If it's not, the employer will be fined.

Bunch of crazy fans start a fight on a scene during some heavy metal concert. In this fight, they take instruments from musicians and use them as weapons. Of course they trash them completely.

NO crime AN, so AAN it is:

Assault (5 years correctional labor). If it's a serious injury, possibly assault with intent to murder (15 years correctional labor). If the person dies, murder. (15 years to capital punishment, depends on the circumstances).

Failure to submit to an on street ID check.

Well, unless ya' violate the laws, there is no punishment for that. Besides, people love some good show.

Some guy murders a man with knife and when someone hears this and comes to the room, the murderer says, that "It's a very special surgery."
