The King of Frisia is considered to be primus inter pares among the Frisian Rulers, quite interesting considering the time period the nation is set in.

Imagine being excommunicated then shits happened It's almost like God and his punishments are real... but two of the three shits that happened were human doings.

AAN: So apparently there are "danger zones" that blatantly exist -- everyone knows it and no one can do anything about it. Strange...

AN: Anaxus is an incredibly cunning and tricky figure in his politics -- decisive and ruthless. I am in no way familiar with Transformer's lore but I somehow feel like this is a prevalent trait in some of its characters.

The Kingdom of Frisia Magna's royal family (Alfbadian Dynasty) that I know of that has both a De Jure and De Facto founding date. Which, that is extremely unique and didn't even think that was possible.

Edit, Ninja'd:

AN: There are more Catholics than Protestants in Zitragrad. Not to mention, there are a large percentage of Non-Orthodox Zitragradians. IRL, Russia's non-orthodox population consists of under 0.5%, not counting non-denominational, meaning that either Alt-History Poland and Sweden proselytize the hell out of Zitragrad or the nuclear exchange ended up causing mass migration to Zitragrad and that ended up causing Catholics to become a sizable majority.

Then again, Zitragrad doesn't take place over all of Russia. Just the European Parts + Ukraine/Parts of the Baltic States. So, perhaps not including the Siberian Peoples changes the numbers.

From what I can read, the origins of their nation within the Holy Land is a result of a power vacuum that arose from a purported "Demon Invasion".

Topoliani, a medieval Crusader State in the Holy Land, traces its origin in Dandi, a Knight who, along with his retinue of two thousand, left on a great exodus from Athens to the Holy Land to found the city-state of the same name.

AN: The Star-State of Humans is a firm believer that it is destined to unite and rule the whole Galaxy. It's ambitious, if nothing else, and this belief is embodied in Ein Galaktischer Staat.

It is a word, actually.

Frisia Magna: When he was young, King Ijsbrecht III's grandmother, Queen Onna, wished to tutor him herself in matters of stewardship, but his father insisted he be educated in martial matters, which he deemed more important, choosing Poppo of Groningen, one of Frisia's most powerful Knight-Commanders, as his tutor. This resulted in a strained relationship with the Queen due to her wish being denied, though Ijsbrecht himself became a skilled tactician and was knighted for his valor in battle. A year after he completed his training under Poppo, he married his wife Frida, and tensions with his grandmother prompted him to leave for Copenhagen.

If you die in Khoronzon you suddenly become some kind of a hero. Are you condecorated? Does your family become rich and famous? No, it is because the act of dying follows the honourable "act" of doing an obligatory donation of your body to the state. Not to give your organs to dying people, but to experimentate with parts of it and then who knows what happen to you. This following sentence is not to criticise, but it sounds terribly similar to Auschwitz.

Which is correct - Learnt or Learned?

These are alternative forms of the past tense and past participle of the verb learn. Both are acceptable, but learned is often used in both British English and American English, while learnt is much more common in British English than in American English.

Google-fu for the win. 😊

You don't get a /stillme when I already did you.

I've learned that The JELLEAIN Republic is an archipelago nation, with many, many islands and landmasses that they occupy.

For Frisia Magna, I have learned about how the country's name came to be, and the fact that Alfbad I only ruled for 9 days, which... for a King, is pretty short. Normally, they get maybe a few weeks, or months, but for him, nope... just 9 days and the name itself has no connections because Alfbad I did not have a dynasty. So... I will say that it's a humble start for a Kingdom?

I learnt that they have 47 recognized puppet nations, and even though some of them are different versions of the main nation (like The Free Land of Horton Technological Industries which is a capitalist Valentine) a huge portion of their puppet nations are created to collect NS cards, a really huge part of it.

And I've also learnt that they seriously need to work a bit on their formatting... In this timeline, Spain joined the Central Powers in WWI (which still lost). Spain was subsequently split up, but later a confederal system would form by the 1930s. But a communist rival formed to the east, and there was a cold war. After the cold war, the country would eventually become prosperous in 2051.

The Mutual East Asian Cooperation Union is a pan-national organization in East and South East Asia made of Indonesia, Brunei, the Philippines, Hatsunia, a unified Korea, Burma, Thailand, Malaysia, Cambodia, Vietnam, Laos, and South China. It can be assumed that given China was the Nazi ally in this timeline, South East Asia didn't become communist under the Chinese sphere of influence.

What I found out: That apparently an underground resistance group arose during WW2 in their timeline, which spawned many uprisings in the nazi concentration camps, and it took them some years, until their created nation was recognized by Allied forces. At one point, they also adopted a different ideology from Soviet industrialization, with more tinge of green politics, albeit still remaining socialistic. Also, their nation reintroduced Eurasian Lynx, and European Bison at some point in the forests, which is pretty impressive for a nation so small, and surely would have needed the help from other, larger countries. (As someone who loves Klezmer and Daniel Kahn's songs, it is kind of refreshing to see a nation based on Yiddish, as it is not that often seen in NS, imo.)
