I prefer his stuff with Maps & Atlases, but I'm just addicted to this guys voice. It's so... I dunno. Appealing to me.

Avoids urge to make his collection of music to go through worse by checking that out I think I have a "Find new music" addiction ☐

You should definitely check Mpas & Atlases out, yeah ☐ Not sure if you'll like them or not, but they're mathy folky poppy indie rock stuff. That sounds far more generic than it is, trust me.

Cast Spells - A Badge

Actually, it doesn't. I've never heard that combination before, so I should definitely check them out....and possibly make my collection of music to go through larger. I definitely like some math rock, folk, and indie rock/indie pop.

Listening to the end of Bitcrush-And Triage over and over again because I find it cool-sounding.

Boards of Canada - Dave (I'm a Real Traditionalist)

Huh, definitely interesting. Not sure how much I can get into them in general, but I'll check more of them out eventually.

I actually remember a day when I would think those vocals were annoying. I'd hear them and be like "Eehhhhh", but now all I thought was "This is different" and ended up finding them interesting. Before I could really only tolerate soft vocals. At least, that was the easiest for me to tolerate. It took me a long time to tolerate Muse' singing, so....

Yeah, that's understandable. It's an acquired taste, but it's, like, REALLY addictive if you manage to get into it. I still can't stand Matt Bellamy's vocals though. That breathing in thing he does... ugh.

That was exactly why it took me forever to tolerate it, actually. He does it rather excessively at times (Or....all the time). Still, I like some Muse. I'd probably only rate them a 6 to a 7 as a whole, though. Some songs maybe an 8. But they aren't up as my favorites by any means.

Real heavy metal non of that nu metal or American garbage. Example being nightwish, hammerfall, turisas, heavenly (dust to dust is orgasmic) and kamelot. Even tho kamelot is American it's. still amazing
