Also, 'summie' being used to derogatorily mean 'newcomer', rather than actually people just coming to troll F7. It's just bad for the health and fun of F7.

Tbh most summies are just awful at making posts in general and refuse to learn from their mistakes, instead insisting that it's the highest quality response possible despite it being something as lacking as this-

My nation is good.

My leader is bored.

My soldiers win.

So on.

Isn't that a bit mean to the newcomers who actually try and learn? Cause

It's more directed at people who come for maybe a few weeks, then leave - the nation CTEs and then they're never heard from again.

Ohh okay! That's fair, but even so, I promise I will continue learning!

Also I will stop replying here for a bit as I'm a bit off track, thanks for being nice though, Drongonia 🍷

Speaking from experience (including myself, as someone who used to be quite the summie in 2019), those who do actually try to put effort do indeed quickly shed the summerposter label within less than two months at most. If you're worried about yourself, don't worry, I've looked through your posts on the threads that are considered to require a modicum of effort, and some of the more recent ones lead me to say that you're doing rather well for someone who's been in this place for less than a week.

If you want a tip, though, writing reasons for your central idea (which should be more focused on the factbook side of things, anyway) tends to be a good way to let people know you're putting in effort. For example, you could compliment someone on how well-written their lore is (a much more well-regarded compliment than just on the flag and name) and write a reason or two as to why you think that.

Especially useful if you want to go into further detail within the thoughts about AN thread, for example. And with enough practice, multi-paragraph posts could become the norm for you. Of course, most people tend to be satisfied with two or three lines (maybe even one that actually goes into some detail), so don't worry about making those all the time.

To be honest, from what I've seen, it's also directed at those who don't put in any effort whatsoever in their replies (to the point of getting crucial details about one's factbooks horribly wrong. No, seriously, that's actually happened before). It just so happens that many, if not most of these people are the same ones you're describing in this post. Probably because many of those who don't try to put it ANY effort happen to be the ones who don't stay around for long.

Oh yeah, really, you do put a shitton of effort into your replies on "Your thoughts on AN", your response to me was a whooping four/five paragraph essay. By the way, your two criticisms (the geographical location of the ancient tribes and the religion formatting) have been fixed 😊.

Real Cliché:

NS Wars (which are a clusterfuck in and of themselves) never being anything close to a realistic or accurate depiction of the war they try to be, in terms of devastation, population and property losses and damages or brutality. They're also always short as hell in terms of timespan.

Of course I'd rather have that over edgy 13-year old "haha look so evil and brutal!!" larp but like. I dunno.

Can it ever really achieve it though? Most people on NS have never been in a war, and they probably wouldn't do the research to figure out the logistics.

It's not even just the logistics of stuff. People severely underestimate how destructive and awful modern wars are for countries where they occur. Ostensibly they don't do things accurately out of a combination of lack of knowledge and not wanting to cripple themselves for the sake of accuracy, which is understandable.
