Oddly specific, but the only crime here would be driving under the influence, and punished by 4 weeks and a year with a revoked license.

It depends what they are. If they are terrorists, jail for up to three years is possible, otherwise it's legal.

That's perfectly legal in Marlenka. You can even own Tanks, Artillery pieces and even Nuclear Submarines if you want.

The above isn't considered criminal within any law codes of Kyria or its constituent states and the like. However, the individual would suffer from some degree social stigma if their ownership of such an item came to be open knowledge.

A few crimes have occurred here.

Assuming that anyone is near the shopping trolley when the grenade is thrown, that is likely attempted or completed intentional homicide, carrying the constitutional maximum penalty of 25 years of detained and directed rehabilitative labor. Multiplied per victim or potential victim. Restitutive labor to compensate the cost of any medical care or funeral expenses.

Alternatively, charges of reckless harm might be brought, with a maximum of 10 years of detained and directed rehabilitative labor multiplied per potential victim. This charge would apply if the facts did not support an intent to kill the particular victim, but the victim was put in grave and reckless risk of harm. Restitutive labor to compensate the cost of any medical care or funeral expenses.

Destruction of the cart is aggravated abuse of collective property subject to a maximum of 3 years of detained and directed rehabilitative labor plus restitutive labor equivalent to the value of the cart.

Acquisition of the grenade in the first place and its misuse amount to renunciation of duty (as all Salvarojenses are nominally considered members of the Gendarmería Nacional, and thus obligated not to misuse items that belong in to its armories) subject to 5 years of detained and directed rehabilitative labor plus restitutive labor equivalent to the value of the grenade, plus expulsion from the GN with concomitant revocation of firearms rights.

Flight to a foreign country is obstruction of justice. 3 years of detained and directed rehabilitative labor. Salvarojense law asserts the right of the state to enforce its orders of "busca y captura" for a wanted fugitive in any country. Despite what dozens of explosion-dominated, derivative Salvarojense action films would suggest, this does not actually happen in reality for obvious reasons without the consent of the state in which the individual is detained.

So all told... easily upwards of 30 years of detained and directed rehabilitative labor if there's so much as a single person near that trolley.

Taking exactly one beer out of a six-pack at a store.

If it comes from the body of a murdered person or from some sort of abuse or such, then the respective punishment would apply. Assuming it's murder, then you get anywhere from 15 years to the death penalty. If it's consensual, for whatever reason, then it's legal. It's not the government's problem if people are consenting to this.
