Plenty of changes, and a great sort of... sneaky-super-spy tone.

For the same kind of feel, but in classical genre, I'd recommend the London Metropolitan Orchestras' rendition of At The End Of The Day, by Amon Tobin

(Brazilian producer, made the soundtracks to Splinter Cell 3 and Infamous, I hope his work gets in the Olympics' opening, something like ISAM maybe)

Don't know the first, but definitely know Amon Tobin and what I've heard of him he is awesome. He did the Infamous soundtrack? No wonder I liked it....

Seeing as he is one of the biggest Brazilian artists ever (as far as I know), I would think he SHOULD be at the Olympic's, but we'll see.

More like what you are currently listening to. If you read some posts you could pretty much see how most of us post.

The term "Real music" is one of the dumbest terms ever. Nothing about your particular music makes it any more "real" than anyone else'. Technically all music is real if you like it or not.

Dance music isn't any more "real" then any other form of music, either. And most of the dance music I've heard so far just bores me, but there is definitely more dance-type of music that I like.

Besides: I think dancing is overrated anyway:P If I'm at a party? Yeah, good luck getting me to dance. At all.

One problem being that I'm self-conscious....

99% of the music I listen to is not dance. I did not mean that dance music has a more ascertainable existence to its sonic emanations in four dimensional reality.

You really should stop being such a square and fucking dance
