A man who gains his legitimacy by fear is not legitimate at all, and as a fellow revolutionary, I can respect any man who rises up in the name of his people! His other policies though? Eh... I can't say I support them. Capitalists are... they're good for society when under control. There are some things the state is better at, like electricity and postage... but event organization? Yeah, I can say I agree with privatizing that. Good on you for legalizing homosexuality too! Ah, I was supposed to rant wasn't I? Well, other than his more capitalist leanings, I can't say I disagree with him on many serious issues.

All-in-all, I would say he's a fine if not off-his-hinges man... I'll admit, that's a bit hypocritical coming from me. At least my doctor would say so. But, I can safely say I like him."

Wrote a response just a while ago:

His reign despite being ideologically communist shares a lot of in common with Rapture. Every citizen views themselves as cog in the machine working together to serve the state and better, the state, which in turn, improves their lives and the cog within the machine that works the hardest is rewarded by the state and can find themselves as a “Working Class Hero” that has risen above their status and now is amongst the Aristocracy to be revered by all for his labour and servitude to the Aquarian Fatherland. While this concept in my interpretation doesn't exactly align with Sebastian's perception. It is more or less the same as our cultures pride itself in achieving greatness and rising above all. Hm, I could be wrong, when he gets the chance to correct in the next turn. Nevertheless, my overall assessment is neutral...

It seems Mr. Camara is a wild man from the country based on the intel provided me. Definitely an interesting politician when his campaign can be described as the “hallowing of a mad man with ideas that no one can translate clearly”. Yet, he was elected into office and seems to not mad at all, just your normal social democrat yet one with traditionalist views when it comes to marriage, which is something we Aquarians aren't obsessed about when it comes to what happens between two consenting adults. Otherwise, his policies are average and pretty common sense to ensure a functional state. Therefore, leaving my assessment to be neutral.

Ah, Chancellor Mercer. I remember hearing about him all those centuries ago, Narcissus brought him up a few times and I found him mildly interesting. Is he still around? I suppose time doesn't really work the same way in this multiversal gathering place as it does in the physical plane. Besides, he's immortal as well. Maybe he really just lasted that long. If that's the case, I do wonder how Rapture might've changed in the years that passed. He always reminded me of Narcissus a bit. His country was in decline, he decided he had to fix it, and he did. One major difference, though - John's thinking is deliberately bound by "human nature", acting within the confines of common reason instead of chasing utopia, while ours is all about rewriting it so that perfection can one day be achieved. I think John here would do well to broaden his horizons a bit and realise that what he thinks of as natural law is not quite so rigid.

OFFICE OF THE PREMIER

Regarding King George IV of the Kingdom of the United States.

The Americas? Forever under the crown or returned in opposition of decadent modern ways? Regardless, I salute King George and his colonies for holding onto a proven way of life. The People's King is as much as a representative of his nation and it's dominions as he is a representative of the ideal English way of life.

Now, if only France would restore the monarchy, and Quebec can return home. Forever a foster child of a lost crown.

For the nation about the nation that Ninja'd me

This entity appears to be incredibly powerful, having reality warping powers and the ability to re-form after death. Although they seem benevolent for the most part, it is impossible to know if they will stay this way due to the nature of what appears to be their immortality. The Comptroller-General recommends that Holly be studied from afar so more of their strengths and weaknesses can be ascertained, such that if they become malicious we will improve our odds of preventing them from destroying us. In the meantime, and until Holly's personality changes, it could be beneficial to open up respectful diplomatic channels with them and their nation and attempt to maintain friendly relations.

Maybe if we're lucky, Holly will permit us to study them in a laboratory environment for the advancement of science and the common good of mankind. All standard consent requirements for any experimentation must be followed, as this entity is clearly sentient enough to warrant human rights, even if they are not necessarily human.

FOR THE ACTUAL AN WHO NINJAD ME

The Comptroller-General admires the Grand Duke's sense of humor, drafting sanctimonious twats into penal battalions called "The Social Justice Warrior Corps", but still finds that action to be extremist and disgusting. When combining it with the Grand Duke's policies on divorce (illegal), adultery (illegal), and free press (illegal) he can't help but wonder if the Duke is building their entire country around their own personal insecurities and ... Quite ironically, finds him to have much in common with the SJWs he so despises. Overall, the Comptroller-General finds him to have a good sense of humor, but no empathy or understanding of his own actions impact on others, which ultimately just makes his sense of humor into a terrifying outlet for his violent and spiteful tendencies. Vadicus Bel-Khyber is ... Not impressed, to say the least, with a man who would send his weakest citizens to the front of the battle line.

Either way, there ain't no way we can be ideological pals, because of all those thousand differences we have, but havin' a common enemy definitely helps to ease tensions, especially tensions we don't need. After all, Mercer is at very least earned his post through hard work.

Oh, and if he doesn't mind, I wanna make an appearance on the frontlines and fight alongside my men, to raise their spirits and inspire them. Besides, I could use a good practice in combat anytime. And learn more about war too."- Shawn Bjornson

"Skyhooked and Rapture working together. Such a duo sounds hectic. I can't help but chuckle as I think of the two leaders interactions.

But this isn't any feeling of greatness, but actually concern. Such composure working with the total opposite is sure to see some disagreements. I sure hope Shawn doesn't get shot in the back so that Rapture can knock out two birds with one stone. It wouldn't be the first time those shady folk stab someone they viewed as a "Ally" in the back. But Shawn is bold and knows what he's getting into. Atleast as I've viewed of the man.
