The nation is a libertarian socialist federated semi-direct democracy that is well known for its political and civil freedoms, but it is also known for its advances in technology most notably wind and solar technology. Just quickly going over their history a bit, it seems like they have had a rather turbulent (but interesting) history. Also since their revolution, most of their society has embraced a more casual appearance and fashion even down to the politicians. Also, I did find the breakdown of their mint and their currency to be a nice read.

A major downside to this so-called “super fuel” is the highly toxic nature of Fenvarium. Unrefined Fenvarium fumes and prolonged exposure to these fumes is known to cause severe, life threatening lung infections which will lead to death. These lung infections are known to be highly painful as the fumes are slowly eating away at the victim’s lungs before they finally explode internally, drowning the victim in their own blood. Or send the victim into cardiac arrest from the high intensity pain. These fumes become even more toxic during the refining process of the fuel due to added chemicals in order to stabilize the fuel and increase the power. Once in a fully refined state these fumes do not pose that much of a serious threat, however prolonged exposure to incredibly high levels of these fumes can cause some lung issues.

I understand that you want people to view your factbooks, but, dude, relax. Don't just tell people to skip someone unless there is an actual reason to, such as them not having any factbooks in this thread's case.

Skip me if you want, BN. I suggest doing Nevertopia.

That it is a small and quiet little country that borders with Germany, it was able to obtain its independence from the Nazis after revolting and defeating them. The nation also seems to have a decentralized media with dozens of different newspapers and media outlets. They also seem to be focused on the idea of "Steady-state economics" which focuses on a stagnant population and a huge stock of capital. Which is a result of overpopulation, overconsumption of resources, and other factors. The nation also seems to have a very strong agriculture sector and is a world leader in agricultural sciences and technology

Fenvarium is a dark black, viscous, oily substance that is sought after for its incredible power and ease of transportation.

So their country is a substance.

- As is my prodivity their country calling codes is valid for the region but in use by Portugal. Silver Star!
- They have the rather unfortunate country code and ccTLD of SHT.
- There nation is heavily greened 5/6 being agricultural land or wilderness
- Over 20% of their people are farmer, despite this I'm not sure even with advanced in agrotech I'm not sure they'd be a agricultural powerhouse given their small size, but i'd need to do more research.

they have a heavily devolutionized form of government, is very prosperous despite being small and in south america and came to be because the argentinians joined the germans during the second world war and got bodied. Theyre also very free in attitude towards political, civil and intellectual areas. Oddly enough this leads to a rather delusional population.

A small but historically rich nation that resides in the Mediterranean region. The nation can trace its roots back to the old empire of Carthage, they been through most of the major political and social events of history. Like the fall of the Roman Empire, the middle ages (and its events), and so on. I also learned that the french rolled in and took over the nation and ruled it with a pretty heavy hand until the Cathaginians revolted in 1534, and now they rule their nation. But they hoping, one day to go back and reconquer their homeland.

They have a very big monument that is a mausoleum for the forgotten or not identified military dead people. It has great and well decorated windows, and gyant statues of knights that hold the roof, and it sounds very cool to visit.
