Not sure if it was you targetted by Crysuko but there are slaver roleplayers who actually do support slavery -or want it to be reinstated- in real life.

I have some bad news for you if you think the slave trade was offensive to anywhere near 'all humanity' two hundred years ago. It is a pretext though. Hostis humani generis has a long history and for nearly all of it the idea that it covers slavers would have been laughed at. Piracy being bad has been a point of agreement for states since they first went to sea; slavery being bad not until relatively recently.

It's 2021 mate, and even in 1840 the Royal Navy was firing broadsides into slave ships. Also if you think being hanged from the yardarm at capture is lenient you should see what the Russians do. I forgot that the notion of slavers as pirates therefore the enemy of all humanity (nobody was convinced by this into thinking the slave trade was bad, as I said, a pretext: slavers are the enemy of all humanity but not actually because muh pirates) was invented this current year. 19th-century Britain and the better part of America understanding basic concepts like human rights is the exception that proves the rule.

Can we stop derailing this thread for the n-th time already?

There is a subtle difference between talking about clichés regarding pirates and slaves in an ICly country, and NSG-esque discussion that should have been in NSG itself - start a thread there if you want, I honestly don't give a monkey's toss.

Eh, I guess only weebies can somehow get it, but I tried to humanize the hyena cat girls the way I did because most of the crap anime that's licenced to sale in the West tends to write "beast people" as passive flat characters and I wanted to spice things up by actually making them use their noggins, sometimes.

But I suck at fantasy fiction, so I use IRL references. I don't have the patience or skill for real Xenofiction. At most, maybe I'd try to write about biological androids or something, their cognitive development would be human but very condensed so that'd be fun.

Regardless, since this isn't the IDT, allow me to present another cliché: humans. Show me a nation of squids and I'll be happy. We have Bears Armed, a nation of bears, and I've seen a nation of cats, but what about sea creatures? Sharks? Dolphins? Whales?

nonhuman nations are indeed pretty based that is, when they don't fall into "this is exactly like a human nation but the population isn't human"
more diversity of thought to reflect diversity of biology, pls :pleading_face:

I want to build Versilia's social and political structures based on the hivemindedness of the "elves"/vampires, as they have a natural psychic link with other members of their species. It's an extrasensory empathy, allowing them to feel one another's emotions, drives and the sort, boosting their cooperative capabilities to levels which humans themselves cannot achieve.

As well, the caste system and caste based dimorphism that's present within the species would heavily affect social structure, and that's pretty core to Versilia.

However, Versilia has a large human minority or plurality that doesn't have this psychic link, nor the expanded means of communication that vampires have (including pheromones, greater range of sounds, greater range of body language and social cues that's also different between castes, and so on in extension to human means of communication); this will strongly affect life in Versilia and its overall structure.

Savroyska wrote:

I'd like to see an alternatively evolved english though

That's essentially what I'm planning for the Britain in Versilia's TL. English has taken a different path than OTL, resembling Dutch in a number of ways; I currently plan for the language to have its 3 gender system and the remnants of a case system but not a full one like German. Its orthography has also changed with German printing presses and reforms of spelling, such as the 'hard' {c} becoming {k} in all instances, the diphthong {ch} remaining spelt as {c}, the 'soft' {c} never coming into use and instead {s} is used. The ending {d} on most words devoiced and became {t}, so 'land' became lant. Affixes like '-ing' standardised into -ung, and 'be-' remained in common use; words like bewerung, meaning 'defence', alongside bestirung/bestyung ('movement') and more. The name of Britain in Versilia's TL is Keningrik Briten(lant).

The way that Borgia Vaticano or whoever speaks makes it seem like they're unironically on board with that insanity. Granted, the level of irony or roleplaying on NS sometimes makes it hard to discern when someone is being truly unironic or not, unless they're really open about it like that CSA extremist you occasionally see; they're very obviously being unironic.

Versilia here flexing all the vampires' cool abilities. All the hyena-girls get is a dependency on foreign guest-workers and immigrants to keep the population replacement rate up or they end up moving abroad to become guest-workers themselves if they don't want to scolded for being "parasite singles".

I may have put too much thought into those tropes about (almost) single-gendered races.
