"Obedience... might be good quality for a soldier, and might serve well, when the one, who is obeyed, is competent in the art of warfare. But what if hierarchy is disrupted. One must also know, how to work on his own and complete the goal without orders. As an independent unit, who follows the common cause. Because total obedience makes an inflexible hierarchy, depending on one person. Take him out, and it crumbles.

You truly are foolish. Speaking in such an arrogant manner, your mind must have been corrupted from reading our lorescripts, that's the only explanation for such a statement.

You must have had your eyes darting around too quickly to realize that I only participated in that civil war... And I can tell you damn well it was worth the fight! If you side with the king that we opposed you side with a murderer who kills those that are different from him and the sickened that could have been cured.

You know know not how these lands are ruled. Sure it's by blood, sure I killed the man before me to sit where I am today.

But he killed the man before him, and that man killed the woman before him. Its how you rule here, if you're so weak hearted you only get killed all the quicker. Some decided to make it harder and put an army at their door step so they may fear the people they lead in peace...

But a true king of corpses shows their strength and shows their worth. I DID NOT WAGE A CIVIL WAR, I only chose the side that I belived that stood for the betterment of my nation.

Then I sat in isolation for so long, when everyone passed away and I finally broke free from my chains and through much thought I fought the king. And I came out on top, sure there was many who decided to try and see if I was worthy and lets just say i personally have.... Warmonger who did I wage war on? They are not the captains or the explorers or the refugees of the outside world that make their visits and homes and leaves in the world of the Horizon. They are a council of more than our entire domain. I do not wish to make judgments, but I will be honest in my views. They have a hatred for one form of rule. Monarchy...is that not...rule by family? My memory serves poorly. The council appreciates equality in all things. Perhaps it may seem in too many things, but I am in no place to know. "The Council has decided to write their comments on the Individual who calls themselves Ennio Joey Barbaro. It is truly a positive sight to see not every human in a political standing follows some form of radical royal bloodlines, or nationalism so rabid it leads to the deaths of many. Even better, The Council is ecstatic to have heard of his rise from a common working class birth, into not only economic success, but political as well. While we may follow the tenants of Communalism in our own practices, we have no qualms with those who make a living for themselves, so long as they do so without stealing from others.

Entertainment is often a sadly unrepresented industry in all nations political processes, so to see such a prolific Public Figure take on an important role, and yet still keep their personal values, is truly impressive indeed. And speak he does, with no fear of spelling out their mind, and giving their own ideals to place on the table. If only more national leaders kept things blunt, than we might actually have impactful interactions more often. Their seeming political independence, and disagreement towards both sides is commendable, and their value of a clear political process is the most impressive of all.

So, as a final conclusion, though we may hold separate worldviews and separate economic preferences, The Council wholeheartedly commends Ennio Joey Barbaro, for being a patriot of their nation, and a more than suitable leader for their people."

"We have a council too! But our council are very different... their's is far bigger, has more than thousand of members, and we have only five so far. Their's I guess is more like a parliament... our is supreme, above parliament. And our admission standards and procedures are different. They require degree in politology and certain age. While we don't care about college degrees or age. For example, I have no college degree, and Casey James... he is 21 years old, but we both proved to be worthy. Because the free people of Sky Reaver horde are the main ruling force, and they will only follow the worthy leaders.

But, we are rather similar in terms of ideology. As far as I know, they are rabid egalitarians, just like us, and they have conquered those, who put their own gain and greed above freedom and dignity of their own folk. Although... I realize, why they killed all royal families members... to chop off the bloodline. I don't think, we could bring ourselves to do such thing should we conquer a monarchy. Yes, we punish the guilty, but we spare the innocents. Ya' know, code of honor.

The difference is that Sky Reavers don't hate monarchs, we have seen many crowned tyrants, but we have also seen the kings and queens, who deeply care for their countries.

As for opinion... I think rather positively of this collective, and would like to reach out. Establish diplomatic realtions, improve them, perhaps become closer."-Shawn Bjornson

After all, the shackles of bureaucracy are omnipotent. It is clear that you threw yourself in a position where you were expected to administrate and supervise the guidance of a nation and its people but nothing about your being suggests that you would bother yourself with micro-managing the state.

Tell me now, how does it feel knowing you've wasted years of your life stuck in a position that only shackled your abilities because it was the only familiar position for you to advance your standing. Glorified commoner, nothing more, possibly less. You need the bodies of others to protect your existence. Your power is artificial. Your existence is artificial. You serve yourself but you follow the footsteps of commoners. Now stare into the abyss that is your soul, empty ambition that has taken you nowhere. You may have spent centuries advancing but your mind has not caught up. They are not G*rmans, nor do they appear to be any threat to the Russian state. Any attention I pay to them would be out of concern for Russia as a whole and any possibility they might challenge us in our Great Trial against the teutonic menace which soils our motherland with every second their jackboots remain on her precious lands. Regardless, they are not a threat to Russia or her people so they are of no concern to me." - Field Marshal Dmitry Timofeyevich Yazov

Just wanted to let you know, you're replying to someone living on a completely different planet, in a time that would be considered as schizo-mix of medieval, renaissance and early industrial age technology, in a desert-orientated country.

Your replies are awfully identical to one another so I'm sure you didn't bother reading the factbook I linked.

"I could draw some parallels between Nebumet and Monaco, but they are not necessarily the same things -- they are lands where money flows and intrigues lie in every corner, and more so in positions of power. Its rulers have to be extraordinary to even breathe well in their seats without being interrupted. There is but so much stake... Wealth possesses men as much as men possess wealth."

"The Haftari is such a kind, it appears. She aptly looks up and fears what the gods can do to those they deem disobedient, and with this notion, she keeps her people in line, not only for the gods but for herself. But she seems to watch her back still, frequently and cautiously, for threats both domestic and foreign. And she should remain as such -- the land she rules has fragile mentality, which might be easily shattered at any suggestion of change. The Thanitari, however... I wonder what motivation it would take to become a literal slave of a nominally thankless position. I do not see much enjoyment in that line of duty, even as a former man of duty. Perhaps it is for the best that the two have met each other."

"She is even older than me, and yet she looks like a literal child. But let us not discern ourselves too much with age. In the line of ascension, it rarely matters how many centuries you have existed. Her reality must have been a completely new lore, unrelated to most that I know. And thankfully, the divide between her realm and what she calls 'outside' appears tight and strong, even if I can see her starting to open up for outsiders. I do not wish to discern myself with another lore outside my sphere of influence beyond general understanding... Completely new, even."

"As a 'leader', I would say she is neither incompetent nor comically evil -- and that is already a major relief. And by Ba'athaal, why does she talk like that...? Is it her natural habit, or is it an attempt to sound 'cursed'?"

Arpent de Neige (Monegasque Republic)

Setting: 1926 (PT/FanT)

After the Monaco Succession Crisis of 1918 ended up with the Grimaldi being exiled from Monaco and the microstate being taken over by pro-French politicians, lobbyists, businessmen, Sicilian mafia and odd string of cultists, the little country on Cote d'Azur now becomes hotbed of excesses and degeneracies that rivals Weimar Republic. Now a gambling table for the struggle of power between multiple factions, in a state where money equals power and vice versa - both in this life and the next. Major influence here.
