It's not a crime. In fact, this is a constitutional right in Merulla.

Your considered a terrible person for advocating the killing of people for their ideologies (except for fascists), but such speech is tolerated as long as the speaker isn't deliberately trying to incite violence.

Grave robbery is punishable by up to one year in prison, and fines proportional to what is stolen/damaged.

Failure to keep and maintain a weapon for civil defense purposes? Assume that conscientious objection isn't a relevant factor.

Unlawful Coercion.

The crime of unlawful coercion is committed when someone violates the constitutional precept that "no one is obliged to do or refrain from doing anything except by virtue of the law". That is, if there is no law allowing or prohibiting something, you are not prohibited or forced to do or stop doing anything.

Taking this specific case, there is no law that forces you to eat a sponge against your will, therefore, whoever is forcing you to eat that sponge is going against the Merullean Constitution and committing the crime of unlawful coercion.

By the way, the minimum penalty for this crime is of 1 year in jail, however, depending on how the victim was forced to eat the sponge and what happened to the victim due to it, the penalty could increase exponentially.

If you impersonate a Government Tax Agent and improperly collect taxes from a citizen?
