"While Deinobotanes are creatures made up of organic material, this 'Paramount' consists of cold, artificial metals. Despite this, there are some similarities between the Deinobotane race and these machines, in which one would likely find to be improbable at first. The Deinobotanes are solely concerned with the spread of their species, which is the same for this machine and its following of automaton. Though as the Deinobotanes wish to spread because of an innate instinctive compulsion to propagate, the Octavians desire to conquer for what they believe is bringing unto the conquered the so-called benefits of assimilation with their collective consciousness. How peculiar, though admittedly quite vague. There is no doubt that they are a strange sort, one in which have rarely been encountered in the universe. They may eventually prove to be a threat, but their current technological limitations hinders their general capacity as a threat to any galactic-spanning state. As it stands, these machines are of no concern to the Deinobotane race. They are little more than malfunctioning appliances upsetting the established order of things in their remote planetary sector, ultimately meaningless in the long period of cosmic events."

Apologies to the AN but I can't form an opinion at all with the little information that I'm being given so I'm just doing the AAN.

"For one that considers themselves to be above the pettiness of organized religion by claiming to be an atheist, you do you want to market yourself as some sort of savior or messiah? Avatar of Sol? Spare me!

Even worse, a piece of artificial intelligence that thinks it has a chance at ascending into the heavens? No thanks, pal. The ones we have already are bad enough as it is. A cold and calculating hunk of metal such as yourself is not one I would approve of.

However, I will admit that your computational power is mind-boggling. A shame you're allowed to use it without someone reeling you in from becoming too ambitious."

(You should create a factbook specifically for your leader /add more to your leader factbook.. I know it takes time but itll give other users more insight on your leader.

I get you have some info but this is a personal opinion, me being a user of vague land even has to specify some things. It's fine to make one and steadily fill it out. I've been bashed many times because people simply find me hard to understand at times.

My best suggestion is to ignore them and do you. Your factbook is a canvas to expand upon. As well as your nation as a whole.

I didn't really pay attention to the very first guy - you! I feel a bit sorry for you and your people, to be honest. Those people from Rapture are the mindless ones, if you ask me. They have been doing nothing but violence towards anyone that even looks at them funny. Look at you, and your nation. What the hell have they done? That is beyond comprehension, don't you think so? I... I am not very sure about how this war is going, and who to support. Current and past interactions would indicate that I will side with you as always, and to stop those people from Rapture, but part of me thinks that you... you might have a little too much power on your hands and go crazy, and trust me, no one wants to see a leader going nuts with power like that! I'm still positive, don't get me wrong, but I will have to wait!

The nation below me? I am flattered by your impressions on my powers and my character, but err... that is something that you might want to consider. It is a very freak accident that got me to where I am right now. If you try it... you just might get squashed, stretched, or dead. Not to mention that I might be a little jealous of sharing my Fate powers with another entity, hehe...

(If needed be, just add more info on your leader. Maybe even a few lines. Have a dedicated factbook instead of making me hunt down the stuff I need. Also, provide substantiated replies. Doesn't need to be an essay, but it's good to have even 1-2 lines that are well-informed on the character you're doing. On Ben Kerry

My, this is a novelty. I have seen reluctant monarchs, yes. With that sort of system, such a consequence is all but inevitable. But a reluctant military dictator? A curious case, certainly. But then, he isn't quite a dictator. The more I read into this, the more it appears to be just another case of involuntary military promotion - and since he does not qualify for a national leader, I cannot judge him as such. So then, let me judge him as a soldier. He appears competent, certainly. But I grow weary of his reluctance to obey orders. Yet at the same time... I cannot exactly fault him for it. History has shown us the consequences of incompetent officers. A soldier who stands against such things is left in a better position when the situation around him inevitably deteriorates... but then, stands at risk with regards to his own hubris, should his

A set of rather unfortunate events that, admittedly, led to her current inclusion in the Valentian diplomatic roster - an enviable position... but was the suffering worth it? It is difficult to imagine what exactly she went through, nor can I really relate in a direct manner. She has my condolences regardless, and I wish her a rapid recovery from any possible trauma she may still carry with her. There is, admittedly, not much to comment on from a political perspective, but at this point that seems to be irrelevant - as a rule of thumb, any Valentian is a worthy ally, and a valuable friend.
