Depends on what the substance is. You can get a prison term that's a measly single year, or one that lasts the rest of your life.

Hit and run.

Likely a fine of to severity, of course depending on how much over the speed limit you were going, how crowded the road you sped on was, as well as time of day, weather, etc. If you speed in an almost comically reckless fashion, like going over a hundred miles an hour in a crowded 60 mph zone, you could face brief jail time of up to a couple weeks to avoid harming the public.

Going onto the front car of a rollercoaster and purposely throwing coins in the air (which could hit, injure, or even maim passengers behind you).

For being a prostitute, it depends if you were coerced into said position or not. In the former case, it isn't regarded as a crime due to the stance that prostitution is a bourgeois decadent and exploitative system, so you would be held in a rehabilitation facility for multiple weeks until a legitimate job has been prepared by the state. However, in the latter case where you have volunteered to be a prostitute, that is punishable by multiple years of hard labor. Now if you bought a sexual favor, you would be executed. And those who've owned prostitution enterprises/brothels have typically been mutilated and tortured to death by red guards, tho the vast majority of those killings happened early on after the revolution

First-degree murder is 30 years in prison, or in special cases life imprisonment.

AAAN:

Well first of all, you'll be forced to pay for any damage you cause them. The charge can be either violence, extreme violence, or potentially deadly violence depending on how fast you were going and what you hit them with. The minimum prison time is a week and the maximum is 20 years.

AN:

If there was no one on board, then you'll be charged with property destruction and given two months in jail. If there were people on board, you'll be charged with attempted murder for every survivor, which will land you a minimum of 20 years in jail.
