Main export: Pianos.

"...it is a consequence of a cultured nobility with in the nation, as (especially grand) pianos are often associated with a highly cultured form of the upper class not found in today's society."

Looks like in Wochaystein learned to produce the pianos on an industrial scale.

An uprising called "Black Sunday" happened on 26 June 2005, where a fascist extremist organization attempted to overthrow the government of Waisnor. 174 people were killed in this uprising and the leaders of the organization that started the uprising were sent to prison.

They are a unified French-Arab nation that's a liberal democracy (especially in comparison to IRL Arab nations), and they are ruled by a coalition of moderates.

Their eastern border is perhaps the most smoothly-cut border imaginable, essentially a straight line that divided their part of Australia from other two nations.

It bugs me.

Their nation takes up the western portion of Australia, which if my experience on Geoguessr is any indication is primarily composed of dust and trees with spikes.

Zitravgrad: The core of their nation appears to be remarkably well-defined radiation zones. It makes one wonder if they're doing experiments or something, those things are so specifically contained.

The 50 millionth modern Germanic nation. Dominant in European affairs but remains on good terms with most of the continent, while maintaining a "friendly rivalry" with the British. Still utilises the same social market economy as our Germany does, and somehow manages to be mostly self-sufficient in terms of food production

The history of compulsory vegetarianism in The Allied Tribes (TAT) allegedly dates back to, astoundingly, more than 9,000 years, with the law being enacted by some sort of predecessor of TAT around 7000 B.C.
