Also, I gotta be honest, I don't think we should care about the difference between people on NSG who post Neo-Nazi/fascist rhetoric to be edgy/ironic/'trigger' other users and the people who post it because they genuinely believe in it because, as someone who has had actual white supremacists tell me that I should be killed, deported, my people are 'ruining this country', etc. (luckily not on NS, but off-site), the last thing I think of Actually, I remember someone on NSG who was genuinely worried about "the white race going extinct", sounds pretty nazi. But I got a 2 week ban for calling them a "hyperconservative twat".

I wouldn't say everyone but you are correct that most have an awful attention, in addition with making terrible excuses for it. Which makes me question with such laziness how were they able to create their worlds or that matter get anything in life? Attention is a required skill, not just for lorebuilding but building a career as well.

I think the issue is a lot of times when people are Prussiaboos it's because they're too afraid to outright say they like Nazi Germany and use the German Empire as a less outright evil surrogate.

How much I would like a little more variety in GE&T. Most are just arms companies and "calls for help" because your resistance group is in dire need of weapons. Obviously, these requests are written like those ads you find on supermarket billboards. Just those next to those looking for a job as a babysitter.

Hey people. Remember a while back when somebody talked about catgirls and animu leader profile pics being cliché? Or using real photographs with animation at the same time?

I messed around and realized something: with anime and cartoons or more fanciful illustrations, the sky is the limit for "realism" and once can get away with it. I drew Tepka/new Montse semi-realistically and applied the cat ears in sketches. As I'm a beginner, I need reference photos. Good luck finding somebody who looks like a cartoon you imagined. Found em finally? Well, time to put on those ears. The result?: The phrase "Thanks I hate it" doesn't do the uncanniness any justice. I'm contemplating erasing the ears altogether when I trace over this and blacken the hair.

Show Spoiler

Oh, and another cliché: Teenage or youthful leaders or characters from more mainstream anime styles. I drew Charles semi-realistically (and messed up the left eye) in recycled paper to get in the mood for LP's Noir-ish story so he looks like a man to avoid that... I have mixed feelings. They resemble Chad and Stacy or like 99.9% of American superheroes with those jawlines and idealized faces. It's a fucking chore and I'm not doing it again.

I'm totally guilty of having fairly young leadership personnel, and the ones I've tried to draw myself have generally been in a fairly typical anime style. Mainly because I don't really know how else to draw things that aren't hideous abominations, but also because it does fit the national theme to some extent. And when I say young, I mean initially...considering how long Kyoki Chudoku has existed by now I don't think any of them would count as all too young, even if some of them might manage to look it by luck or really dedicated effort.

I don't think there is anything wrong with having youthful leaders though. I personally hate the idea of aging and being forced into adult roles, which is reflected in all my nations' having young looking politicians, even if they're far older than they appear.

RE: the topic of young characters.

It honestly depends on how realistic you want to be. Frankly, modern nations tend to have older heads of state for a reason: young people tend to be really fucking stupid, and this is reflected in a lot of the attitudes held towards young politicians. Of course, this is no reason to become a full-blown gerontocracy (looking at you, USA), but I think taking power at any age between 18 and 30 is stretching it a little.

Unless, of course, you have a particular national culture that values youth; or political intricacies which have thrust the role of leadership upon a young person (i.e., an absolute monarch dying while their heir is still in their 20s). If you want to have some magic fantasy world where everyone's looking young and fresh no matter their age, go ahead -- but I don't think it's good if you're going for gritty realism. Heads of state are rarely youthful and handsome, they're old and portly. A lot of NSers just don't really like to come to terms with this.

Did that with Tohorin, none of it was original, mind you; I integrated bits of supposed Nahua tradition. It had to do with an Elective Monarchy whose leader has to personify the Sun Goddess, a death-life-rebirth deity which has to maintain a youthful look, so there was a ritualistic meaning to the age limit being over 52. Same as a the New Fire Ceremony.

When it comes to marrying ages, I take the current British Royal Family as a RL reference. Go back in time too much and things can get icky.

Ari's, if I can toot my own horn, an example of this- her particular justification for being young, apart from the whole "warrior woman" trope, is very much a result of her political situation. Her father was physically incapable of producing heirs past her as a result of injury, and as a side-effect of that injury he died well before he "planned" to, which serves as a significant character motivator through her defining herself largely as his successor and as being illegitimate as an independent individual.

And I'm more or less guilty of this for Palisade, I've got to say; the reason a good number of the characters are younger (where it doesn't fall into the above qualifier of "political machinations and puppetry") is largely because I couldn't find the right vibe in art and images I looked through. Though I was able to turn this around into some bad, ham-fisted lore about the existence of rejuvenative therapy and such, but still... retroactive justification for a dearth of appropriate source imagery. And I've got to admit that.
