I appreciate that distinction, Kiu! I've only gotten it once or twice, but I find it odd when Baizou is called anime for the reason you just described—the art portraying the leaders is anime-style, but nothing about the narrative is "anime." I just don't want to use a real person's photo to portray a fake person. Feels better to use a fake person to portray a fake person.

Is this the time where I point out that anime literally just means 'animation produced in Japan for a Japanese audience' and accusing something of being 'anime' makes zero sense because anime as a medium can range from shows literally aimed at preschoolers that wouldn't be out of place on channels like Nick Jr. to dramas aimed at adult audiences and everything in between lol.

No, that's very fair and worth pointing out! I guess I stumbled into the pitfall myself when I would usually try to be more careful. When the medium runs the gamut from Anpanman to Wanpanman, it's not particularly descriptive of anything besides place of origin and first audience.

Yeah, that's it- to what Gandoor said. It's largely the cultural differences, and, I think, more importantly the blind reproduction of tropes rooted in those cultural differences without understanding them, that makes something "anime".

I just don't want to use a real person's photo to portray a fake person. Feels better to use a fake person to portray a fake person.

This absolutely. I'd prefer spending an hour just reloading thispersondoesnotexist.com until I get a picture that vaguely works for an MT leader than I would use a real political figure; the only exception with that was Bert, just because I had a specific image in mind for him that I knew an actual picture existed for.

Hell I think I stole my current Prime Minister's pic off fuckin Aliexpress or something.

Which probably means the person in the photos is Chinese and not Korean but at least I've got a few pics I can use instead of just one over and over

This is the exact reason why I hate the term "anime" simply because it is just so vague and ambiguous.

There's a reason why I always use the phrase "anime and hentai" so people can immediately understand what kind of anime I am referring too. Because of that, I use "hentai" as a synonym for "anime" (@Las Palmeras) because I'm not even sure if the kind of anime I am referring too has a specific word for them.

This is getting off-topic (or well as much off-topic as this thread can get) but I just call anime 'cartoons' tbh, unless I specifically need to distinguish between it and non-Japanese stuff, because it is all cartoons.

Although I guess 'cartoons' is even more vague but whatever.

One of the good things about PT nations, I think, is how you can pretend that the different pictures are just different depictions of the same person based on how the people of the time imagine them to have looked (quick sorta example, Julius C.), and it sort of works without having to rely on the pictures actually looking like the same person or having the same style.

I'll admit to being guilty of a cliché. Using pictures of an attractive person as your leader. I'm slightly subverting it though because I use pictures of the first lady of Azerbaijan for my leader rather than some model or something.

One cliché I really don't like is giant world spanning empires. I've been having difficulty finding RPs I can do with my nation because I'm not interested in getting curbed stomped by some Soviet Union, German Empire that controls all of Europe, or USA that controls all of North and South America. Besides, if you want a reasonably strong nation I think there's more creativity to be had in middle powers as long as you don't fall into the trap of "European social democracy that's maybe a constitutional monarchy."

I sometimes use models for pictures of Voxijans, but never for the leaders. The leader I started this nation with, Bixenta Agirre, used the picture of a leader of Mauritius. When I had an election, I searched and searched for the perfect picture to represent Etor Gurrantz, but I wound up with another Mauritian politician. Something about that small African island...

For the rest of my people, I use pictures of people of various ethnicities. I've gone through Mexican, Nicaraguan, Spanish, Portuguese, Filipino, Venezuelan, Indonesian, Indian, Arab, Puerto Rican, and Brazilian, plus some others that I don't remember. I used to have a factbook called "Faces of Voxija", but I got rid of it after some creep implied that the sole purpose of my nation is for hot brown girls.

I always use real people, although I used a cartoon to demonstrate my national animal. No anime for me! Also no "This person does not exist". My choice of images might be creepy, but at least I'm not a cliché.

I found "this person does not exist" from that NS list of links, and that is how I got WF's modern leaders. Alastair's picture is seriously on point.
