"I have a couple friends who like astrology, as well as Leo Berge does, which I find respectable. However, what I find less respectable about Leo is that he once joined a 'Techno-Mafia'. Any type of mafia is bad because they are always up to no good and they're criminals. And why are you calling people, even your own boss, defamatory names? And not to mention you once tried to shoot a person, which I do know you were assigned to do, but that is just wrong. Honestly, Leo was a terrible person and did a lot of things that I find unimaginable for a coalition leader to do."

Empress Courtney von Bennett I inspecting a military parade on the Imperial Capital Planet of New Horizon.

~ April 4th, 2601 ~

"It's been a year of my reign in this most holy Empire, but through my short time of governance I have seen very little women in positions of power. I had accepted that this is highly rare no matter what world you live in, so you can imagine how I felt seeing another female Monarch of a powerful state. Nevertheless, I am a very religious woman myself and attend the Holy Gathering every Friday like good citizens do. So, naturally I am happy to see you were raised to correctly call out those who defy how your Gods command you to live. Truly in a multiverse as chaotic as ours it is us few that can say we are fit to lead, may the most holy protect you in your mission to lead your Empire to the stars dear Empress."

"Her Imperial Majesty is in many ways an agreeable figure, departing from her predecessors' apparently quite elitist rule to implement social reforms provide needed relief for the masses in spite of objections from the usual corrupt elements of society. She has also led a very spiritual life so far in contrast to the less religious outlook of many of her nation's citizens, while still respecting the rights and differing views of those who do not share her devotion. However, not all info on the Empress is so positive. Though her attitude toward other species and their respective civilizations is not unexpected given the horror visited upon their worlds Earth, it is nonetheless a shame that she might reject diplomacy from peaceful races, especially considering that some may have been victims of a similar - or the same - force that shattered her ancestral homeland. More concerning is her jovial destruction of alien life, especially when you factor in how broad her country's definition of a 'threatening' alien is. It should come as no surprise that I doubt she will see my kind in any positive light, though as a fellow woman of faith and a native to Earth I would welcome being proved wrong. As it stands, though, my opinion is neutral and wary at best."

RESPONSE FROM THE INSTITUTE NOTE

"MS Isabella is an agreeable fellow who seems to be genuinely interested in the well being of her people. While there is little detail on her policies post-ascension to power, her ideals are noble and that's something all humans should respect. It is needed strength of ideals for one to overcome her fear of speaking in public and to take on a craftsmanship deemed irresponsible on her community. It is needed strength of spirit for one to venture into an unknown insurgency, and it is needed cunning to rise through its ranks as she did. Now, even if I wholeheartedly support her idealism, I must advise against overlooking pragmatism. For a struggling semi-nation like hers the quest for allies and power should be above their quest for ideals."

"It is rare for me to find a foreign leader who I can agree with. When I first saw 'Celestial Republic', I will admit that I assumed you were a 'politician' who used his witchcraft to destroy stone-tossers who believed in a slightly different form of Republicanism. I am glad you proved me wrong, Šarru Rabû. You bear the emblem of the mighty Lamassu, a proud species of holy protectors, just as us. In fact, you bear many of the same values as my own people, Mamlu Ansar."

We even speak the same language, although with some dialectical differences. But, this is not about your people, but rather about you.

I respect you, Mamlu Ansar. You may not be a God as I am, but you share many of the same qualities I would expect a God-King to have, let alone a mortal human. You are a good warrior and have something I can respect above all - you are direct. You do not try to weave your way around a complex system, you kick down the door. Weaving in both of our realms gets people killed, and I like that about you. It's gross to try and manipulate power when the Gods chose both of us to rule - although in your case less directly. We may disagree on how to rule, but your gods have different wishes for your people just as my gods do.

And so, I say onto thee Mamlu Ansar, go forth and spread civility across the multiverse. You may consider me to be uncivilized, but I feel like you're the closest to us we got out there in the vast realm of the Gods. I'd rather have you civilize barbarians than some uptight 'Roman', 'German', 'Liberal', or - Omera forbid - 'Anglo' realm 'civilize' the multiverse. May your Gods watch over you."

- Nutesh of Adad

("Sarru Rabû" means Great King, in this case used to describe King-Like qualities rather than the actual monarchical title. "Mamlu" means noble, in this case being used as the Adadian equivalent of "Sir.")

The only thing that I find interesting about this petty politician is that his own dossier calls him boring, because by Aedon he's even more boring than most of the Mechyrdians' leaders! (Looking at you, Basileiów) Anyway, he was raised Catholic, graduated high school with an honors degree, blah blah blah I don't care. His hobbies are equally as boring, and a head of state having a lets-play channel just screams "hello fellow kids"; though maybe I'm not one to speak about boring hobbies. I used to be quite the bookworm back in my youth.

His policies are like most libertarians or "liberalarians" that I've seen thousands of times in that he doesn't give a single damn about the collective or the greater good. Tremulo under Johnson's barely-even-a-leadership doesn't refer to a people, but merely a population: a loosely-connected, atomized society; a sea sparsely dotted with islands separated by several kilometers of ocean.

I would call my opinion of Johnson negative, but he is so irrelevant that it's not worth the energy to have a negative opinion of him. So I'll just say that I'm indifferent to him.

Carl's Mood: Tense

"Wow I'm not used to this many consonants layered consecutively; not that that's a bad thing, of course, just a little out of the ordinary. I see that he started his career early, which is expected, but makes me a little weary. Legislatively speaking, there really isn't much to say other than this man's choices are a bit of a rollercoaster. I can handle the increases in sales, wealth, and religious charity taxes, but the state subsidization of illegal substance manufacturing gives Ogus a bit of a warlord-like impression. At least that's how I see it. The whole universal basic income policy is actually very smart though, and I like the direction he went with that given the resources available."

"All things considered, I really don't know what to say about Khan. He's a strange fellow, no doubt about that, but I'm struggling to determine just what exactly his motives are. He certainly has no reservations regarding pragmatic militarism, or at least something resembling it, and I find his bluntness to possibly be an indication of a deeper sociopathy that isn't readily apparent at first glance. I think it's best that I just leave him to his own affairs, and hope that we never cross paths."

• Carl Kirkman, General Manager (#1309) •

"Arslan, what a pleasant surprise. It's nice to finally journal about someone who shares the same level of respect for meritocratic institutions that I possess. Seriously though, you'd think that a simple distaste for corruption would be more common consensus than it is for those in positions of power, but I find Arslan is actually the outlier these days. Everyone has an agenda, some surreptitious motive to get themselves ahead, and while he isn't immune to bureaucratic misdeeds, he's still acting with a hell of a lot more integrity than most leaders. To be entirely honest, I've always born a little animosity towards structured succession via blood, but Arslan treats his position so seriously, I honestly don't think there's someone better suited for the job than Arslan himself. "

"I see that his economic policy initiated a bit of contention among labour groups, and that's to be expected, I mean you can't exactly please everyone, especially when you have a bottom line. Trust me, I sympathize with him on this one, and I'd say that he did an excellent job, particularly with regards to public vocational support, given his limited resources. All things considered, Arslan is an idealistic man with significant legislative resilience. He's the only man in the world that I think would ever have the cajones to institute such an aggressive physical fitness campaign, and I think it just speaks once more to his dedication. I can't lie, I get a bit of an authoritarian impression from him, but I could definitely imagine worse people in his position."

"...wait, this man is the leader of a store? How is a store considered its own nation? Ah, well, I suppose it doesn't matter. Carl seems to be a proper leader who treats his employees well. He also cares very much for advancing his store and he seems to fight against corruption"

Gunter's Status: Hunting with Tag and Nacht, his white and black dire wolves, deep in the forests

"Her Majesty the Sovereign of Zeon reminds me of both His Majesty and his wife: both are young rulers and have refined characters that are becoming rare among leaders these days. She reminds me of His Majesty most of the time, who was thrust into the throne of Emperor and was ruling a country at war with the world but he maintained mildness and acted even under duress."

"If she is anything like His Majesty in the future, then I can say that I am hopeful to see her"

"This dogtending Paršumu led the hordes of his tribe to victory in a great war, coincidentally called the 'Great War', very creative name, guys, while fighting alongside his men on some thing called Mek, whatever that is. He is a man who's bound to duty, a competent tactician, totally loyal, an adherent of strict discipline, and happy to get his hands dirty- why, this guy sounds almost Shurayu, and almost looks it too what with the beard! As far as savages go, this one is alright."
