He is a good nomothete [representative], but I don't think he's suited to be in charge of Tarvelia. I admire the effort he's put into getting to this point, but we'll have to see how this year plays out before we can give positive feedback. My first impression is that he's a great legislative asset. He has the right work ethic, and could easily become a legitimate influencer. He's a fairly aggressive defender of his beliefs, which can be a strength or a weakness depending on which side you are on. He has a good feel for their politics, which is a great sign.

- Phlegomy

AN: He is a great leader and I admire his effort in standing up for the downtrodden. I also respect his decisions; I think he's come a long way from his days as Adrien Vorster's close friend. I wish him the best of luck with his duty and I look forward to meeting him in person.

"So the Valentians have yet another leader for science. A bit ineffective when AI could do the job just fine, but such inefficiency is to be expected from Valentine Z. As for Marcus himself, I find that he does his job fine as shown with that worm incident, but as with most Valentians, he would be far better off if he assimilated his population. Cancer and malnutrition wouldn't need to be cured if they didn't have flesh, furthermore his entire job of research wouldn't exist as AI would do it far better.
