Socialist Macronesia wrote:

It honestly depends on how it's done. If it's a well written thread that explores the intricacies and nuances of such a medium, then it's usually not their own views. But there's not very many of those. A majority of them are just one line "we kill all the gays!" type of stuff. And frankly, I think that's the thing people miss: you can say something's not your real views all you want, but A. your assholery... err... poor taste still shows through, and B. just because you say something isn't your real world view doesn't mean that you aren't just lying. That's not just a free pass to kill as many ethnic groups as you want in your RPs just to get the same five word responses of "we are disappointed in you" or war declarations that never seem to be brought up again.

~~Well-written genocide gets a pass.~~ Not only does it handle the situation in good taste while not shying away from some of the more thought-provoking and in-depth content that might seem more controversial, but is still handled in a way that makes it clear that this is in fact supposed to be a bad thing, and most ordinary people within the story can comprehend that, rather than just being mindless workers of the state with no internal morals or ethics. They may be able and/or willing to put those away in times of conflict when they get carried away or get orders they must follow, but the ordinary person, including soldiers, have no desire to murder every LGBT+ individual they come across. They may not necessarily like them or might think they're "weird," but there's a difference between "they're a little bit different" and "they're a subhuman group that I will help eradicate." In a poorly written RP, like most on this subject, they assume everyone does what they're ordered to do with no questions asked.

Well-written post, and a very fair set of points you make. I do concur that the one-line genocide RPs which exist purely for the sake of being edgy are cringe and unnecessary, but imo those people are usually just edgy teenagers who would run away if a gay gymbro looked at them funny - it's not necessarily their worldview but they do it for the shock/edginess factor.

I broadly concur. Of course there are people on this site who unironically want to kill gay people or whatever; these people are odd tbh. But yeah, most of the meme-tier homophobia RP isn't actually driven by one's IRL beliefs, but just a terrible villain complex without the lorebuilding to back it up. I'm more annoyed at it because it clogs forum space with the same charade that's happened a thousand times before than because of how it depicts minorities.

I'm not sure how real that whole concept is, but I do feel sorry for anyone who feels that way, in truth. One would imagine there's a lot of conflicted feelings and emotions going on.

Yeah, note that I implicated that it's for some folks and I am in no particular targeting anyone. It is just my observation, but of course, there are several other possibilities.

So tropes-wise, there are definitely both sides to it: One that is extremely pro-LGBT, and other that is anti-LGBT. Whatever the stance is, I think it is ICly detrimental if you have a character or your country revolve around it too much, unless it is understandably a focal point of happenings in your nation. Often times it becomes a bit obvious that the user's own views definitely leaked into it, which (again) can be either subtle or blatantly obvious to the point of "Yes, we get it."

I made Laka to somewhat reflect my views, to the point that it wouldn't become some kind of a "Mary Sue"-ish country like some of soviet sci-fi communist states. Hell, I even wrote in an extremely militarized police force that's supposed to deal with insurgents that basically don't exist.

Also, despite my queen being extremely anti-LGBTQ she is also a closeted lesbian and probably a closeted trans male idk

Tfw you skirt around the issue by having only one lesbian character and even then she only appears in flashbacks. 🙄

Jokes aside, despite my views on the matter I don't really touch it that much in canon because there's just so many other topics one can focus on, which I do. I got lots of material waiting to be put down on the forums, including history, eschatology, and divinity, so yeah.

My least favourite cliché would have to be nations made for power trips in general. I like the idea of a space empire that can devour worlds, but, maybe try to punch in your own weight class in RP threads, or, those nations meant to show the infallible nature of one's chosen political doctrine. In my opinion, the 'Ultra pure esoteric Hitlerism' utopia is just as irritating as the 'perfect anarcho pink communism femboy' utopias. I have made my fair share of nations that are power trips for politics and just...power (I was both younger and dumber), so, take my opinion with a grain of salt, or a whole bag of it.

One cliché I want to see more of is settings that incorporate multiple players, I'm doing one with a few IRL buddies, and we plan to run a Cyberpunk 2020 game in it. A second cliché is retro-futurism or alt-tech scenarios, I have yet to see a China that uses lab grown brains for super computers, or an (active) Diesel punk or clock punk nation.

Thank you for coming to my Ted talk, I apologize for my rambling nature and any offence given.

I'm in an online community that's a shared setting. It's quite fun.

I mean...none of the users (myself included) with "flag waifus" consider them as canonical ICly when it comes to their lore or factbooks...not that I know.

I find it funny that several of people have mistakenly commented that my plain flag is "Nordic".
