Very small punishment, say a £25 fine or such.

Breaking something in a publicly owned space i.e a park

(Like destroying a bench or spray painting a wall etc.)

If by accident, then no punishment.

If by intention, then a fine, depending on the size and importance of the thing broken.

No legal punishment for slapping them. Instead, the one who slapped the fast food cashier will be shamed in front of everyone in the store, and then kicked out of the fast food store.

Depends on the building, but you'll have to pay the victim and go to prison. If you broke because of the fine, you'll go to a labor camp.

If it wasn't clear that it was a joke, and the government somehow finds out, then JUSTBEAVERS might come to your house and check your search history, etc. to find out if it was actually a joke.

Depending on how endangered the animal is, the fine may differ from 1000 notes to 1 million notes, shall the convict fail to pay the fine, it's going to be a death sentence.

Forgetting to assign a crime to be punished? That's a reprimanding.

Piscatania wrote:

This is most likely going to end with the confiscation of aforementioned firearms as well as a hefty fine and a few years in jail. Of course, it does depend on the severity. Weapons that aren't too much of a threat could end with just the hefty fine, but heavier weapons like heavy machine guns or rocket launchers could end with the jail sentence up to 5 years.

Was it committed like singlehandedly? I suppose a public hanging. If it was one by a large group of people... I suppose public hanging for anyone who directly participated, long prison terms, fines, and reparations for those who were involved indirectly.

Varies from region to region, some it perfectly legal then others if the person in question is carrying one without a permit, it a felony. Again varies either a large fine, lose of gun privileges, and jail time from 5 years up to 10 or all three.

Not a crime if you pay for it later. If you don't pay however, it can be considered as theft which is punishable with a fine.

Smoking in public?

Not really a crime, some councils do have by-laws against it in certain areas and if you break those laws the worst you'll get is a fine.
