In regards to the Smiths, it wasn't until I heard them in the context of being the favorite of a contract killer in David Fincher's The Killer (2023), that I began to enjoy the Smiths. Before that, I really didn't understand any of their work. Too artsy, too intellectual. It was on The Killer where Morrissey's presence became more apparent to me. I think "Well I Wonder" was the group's undisputed masterpiece. It's an epic meditation on the woes and throes of unrequited love. At the same time, it deepens and enriches the Meat is Murder album by shining as a B-side. "There Is a Light That Never Goes Out" is one of the most moving songs of the 1980s, about longing to fit in and finding refuge in a companion. The song is, despite its sometimes somber lyrics, extremely uplifting. Their lyrics are as positive and affirmative as anything I've heard in rock. In terms of lyrical craftsmanship, the sheer songwriting, "How Soon Is Now?" hits a new peak of professionalism. Morrissey's solo career seems to be more commercial and therefore more satisfying, in a narrower way. Especially songs like "Everyday Is Like Sunday" and "Let Me Kiss You." But I also think Morrissey works best within the confines of the group, than as a solo artist, and I stress the word artist. This is "Heaven Knows I'm Miserable", a great, great song, a personal favorite.
