"This President seems to be a mere faceless bureaucrat, only attaining success through his familiar connections. Perhaps nepotism has created a few good leaders in the past, though to those whom have actually had to toil and sacrifice for their power, like myself, it can seem unfair. In all honesty I could care less how influential or noble one's parentage may have been, as long as they themselves are competent enough to worthy my employ. Despite this, I am rather apathetic towards Garam, while not fully despising him, I do not hold any sort of fondness for him either. One could admire his patience in maneuvering through years in bureaucracy and government offices to ultimately claiming the Presidency for himself, though I find such to be a frankly uninteresting and undignified way to have arisen to power."

"The alchemist? Now that's a nickname if I've ever heard one, and fitting if you consider his earliest vested pharmaceutical interests. While I personally despise alcohol, I can certainly appreciate his ability to parlay what was essentially a formula for extra strength cough syrup into a thriving spirits concern. I'd say I'm terrified of this guy, but I've really got to hand it to him...he truly embodies the classy, emotionless pragmatism of ALL the great sociopaths. I mean, not only does he basically have his underlings deep enough in the pot that they can't escape, he's also turning up the gas so slowly that they don't realise their brains are gradually degenerating into malleable, soft boiled Jell-O. That's not easy to do, and yet he makes it seem as if it's tea by the sea, so kudos for that. But oh well. The guy's still a dick."

"I see...he [Mister La Selle] is a leader with a clear view of the future for his country. Something visually spectacular and artistic, all of it will be done so cleverly...and inexpensively. Just by reading the information that is provided with photos, the construction of major public works such as his Transnational Public Freeways System, and constructing most of his urban infrastructures with cost-effective methods, my personal conviction is that human civilization, no matter where, will need generations to be creative and ingenious for many centuries to come. I say I do applaud Mister La Salle for his ingenuity, perhaps my son will find inspiration once he succeeds me."

He will be easy to crack or perhaps just ignore outright, when it comes to seizing opportunities from around the world such as doing business with that Aterian Rebel leader. As Pickett from what is observed is incapable of doing that with any leader that mocks his freakish stature. I did always wanted to try my hand at war-profiteering, especially when it comes to arming insurgents knock out the big fish to gain ground in their fragile nation awaiting a corporate takeover. Overall my stance is neutral to indifferent. I might make another look at his absurd policies, if anything catches noteworthy."

Mercer is a shrewd capitalist businessman who, and I'm sure he may take this as a compliment, represents danger. A man whose confidence in their superiority taking to the millions on searching for a remedy for mortality. A remedy that once he got he reserved to the offices of a select few allies. In following this man introduced mass surveillance including cameras, data collection, and bugging the homes of citizens. It becomes highly apparent that a privately leased city is perhaps not a good idea for the well-being of the common folk. In combination, he implements a heavily militarized law enforcement section to stand by the observations made by this unconscionable abuse of human rights that is Century Bay's surveillance system

In summary, Mercer is a physically powerful immortal capitalist who privately runs a city and maintains power through a heavily militarized police force and an unprecedented scale of mass surveillance down to bugging and putting cameras in every home. He is the corporate oligarchy embodied and has shown ambivalence to all outside opposition to his draconian leadership.

My opinion on this Mercer fellow is that he epitomizes why every country needs a strong Socialist and labor coalition capable of pushing against such disturbing forces as Mercer.

"There is much I hold in reservation regarding Mr. Mercer. His policies are shrouded and isolated, we can't really confirm what many of them are. There appears to be conscripted service, a capitalistic economy, and disturbingly, organ harvesting. As far as Mr. Mercer himself is concerned, I find it very troubling to hear that he endorsed unethical experiments on immortality, and is deaf to all criticism. These are hallmarks of a despot, and until Mercer explains himself on his positions, which I am not holding my breath for, I will withhold my endorsement."

But anyways, to his actual governance. Daryush is a snake. Plain and simple. He will askiss you before stabbing you in the back.

His 'democracy', as with all liberal 'democracies', represents the rule of an elected elite upon the populace. Though, I guess it is less worse than monarchism and rule by clergy, and it isn't like I'm expecting Iranians to achieve the sort of democracy that the white man has achieved in my timeline. Though, I guess the Kurds of my timeline have achieved great things.

Honestly, I wouldn't even have hate him if he didn't diss me. I mean, I never would've thought that a secular Iranian republic could've came to being, considering that the Shah's White Revolution mostly alienated the conservative clerics and Bazaar merchants. Even more interesting is that Mossadegh was overthrown by the Shah. I never would've expected such close political partners to be at odds, but I guess there's a lot of political intrigue in his timeline. A timeline where the USSR and United States were entangled in the Cold War, a half century before it happened in my timeline."

His voluntary entry into that pit of snakes known as 'democratic institutions' is as certain to destroy his career in music-nascent as it may be- as a whale eating krill. Inevitable, unchanging, and distinctly distressing.
