Rail transport is fairly widespread, with over 50 million riders annually and growing due to recently imposed oil rationing. The technology has also moved anachronistically through time which, honestly, is pretty cool. They also use the fairly ubiquitous 1,435 mm track gauge, which is interesting!

Convallaria:
Their President, LaSalle, is actually an architect and has taken part in urban planning and housing projects.

Port Spratly:

They're an island republic in the South China Sea ( which everyone was fighting about a few years ago IRL ) which has cordial relations with the ROC, probably meaning the PRC never rose to power in China.

It's an archipelago-based trade nation in the South China Sea. I like these sorts of nations. I find them interesting and I like that they don't try too hard to be extraordinary.

Woah. This thread is busy.

New Carthage is currently at war with Tunsia and most of the Middle East as well. I haven't seen a conflict happen in real-time in NS before. This is actually pretty cool.

They are descended from a group of Phoenicians who escaped the Fall of Carthage and spent centuries hiding in the Atlas Mountains before reemerging after the Fall of the Western Roman Empire. During the Middle Ages they were subjugated by France but won independence in peace brokered by the Pope.

The equivalent of the Great Depression in Rhoania's universe seems to have started with a stock market crash in London, in 1930. Like many other countries, Rhoania was hit hard by the depression, which presumably destabilized the country's politics. Four years after the crash, the Rhoanian military deposed the republican government in a coup d'état and restored the monarchy under Constantine XIV.

The Second Carthagian war happened because New Carthagea basically declared war on Tunisia to take back their lost lands which the rest of NATO joined Carthagea and the rest of Northern Africa and much of the Middle East joined Tunisia.

They are not a conventional nation but rather five nations in one account in order to eliminate the need of maintaining so many puppet nations. That's smart. but it does take a lot of effort.
