Yay! Looking at your political parties' factbook, it seems like the Communist Party has agreed or made a compromise with the Socialist Party's pacifism, which was one of my main worries about the merger.

Motion to set a term length for House of Representatives narrowly fails in the Senate.

I mean, I think it's going to be a great idea to establish term limits/length for both houses, as you can't make the same person getting elected over and over again.

(Worse than that: the Senators aren't even elected but appointed by state legislatures, and Representatives don't have term length and may represent a riding for decades on end. The ridings only hold elections if a) the Representative steps down or is in some way incapable of performing their duties; b) the riding decides they want to remove him, in which case they will have to first declare this intent by plebiscite; or c) the Parliament as a whole dissolves (either by its own hands, the President, the Emperor, or because of other provisions in federal law) /skip
