I'm pretty sure giving samples of one's RP experience was a thing back when I actually cared about RPing on this board back in like 2011-2012.

I wasn't aware it ever stopped being a thing.

Exactly. That's why several apps in PZTM require you provide an RP sample in the first place--to judge your quality of writing/RPping.

This would be a good example for people in other RP forums to follow if they want to try to have the balance between not just insulating themselves into a group and weeding out the one line posters who have no desire to change.

And all of the one-line posters could just have one-line RPs...problem is, they will likely be making a post every five minutes, even with the slowpost (THANKS, SPAMMER).

Most sides generally agree that fights in RP should be fair. This means that both sides generally give up some of their power to even the playing field for one another; you generally might make your weapons less powerful than they are canonically. If you show up and say "I surprise attack you!" then I'm pulling out all the stops. You will be destroyed because I'm not going to give you that luxury of weakening myself for someone I didn't want to RP with. And if you're a higher tech level and trying to godmod me, I'll probably just ignore you entirely.

A cliché concerning embassies: when a new user who has just signed up with NS asks you to open an embassy (because it is the first that happens) and you do not know whether to accept it or not because it may not even exceed the month.

Historically, I've accepted them in the spirit of helping to get new folks into the site/game. I view it as an act of kindness and stewardship that isn't overly taxing or burdensome. Worst case scenario, they CTE and you cancel the embassy. Best case scenario, you gain a new associate.

You recognize an embassy collector by the fact that:

1) The ambassadors sent by that nation are all bachelors / spinsters.

- 2) They are all healthy.
- 3) In case the age is asked, I'm almost always around 25 (but don't you finish graduating at that age? And shouldn't you have a minimum of diplomatic experience to be an ambassador?)
- 4) Send a diplomatic delegation with a security staff barely armed with a gun.
- 5) No letter IC, and everything will be taken with an insensitive "Accepted".

Well, yes. This is the reason why I closed down my embassy thread -- because I realized that the effort made there only amount to some names on my list and I never actually had further interactions with the people who applied to me or to whom I applied.

RP OOC threads becoming filled with inside jokes over time

Not that it's a bad thing, in fact, I'd say it points towards a sort of community forming around that RP over time, such is the case with many of the long running P2TM RPs
