"While the directorate managed to lead the Karakalpakhs out of the Soviet Union, which is one of the few commendable parts of them, they are unfortunately at the head of a semi-autocratic authoritarian shithole, like their fellow Central Asians. I find this regrettable, but after all, most 'people's parties' tend to forget their beginnings once they come to power, and they happen to be among this category.

Now to Ideology. The directorate is social democratic, but as their actions have shown, I would consider them 'social autocratic', as no democratic nation has such blatant vote rigging. They are also social conservatives, a viewpoint I much dislike, but you have to pander to the masses if you want to rule such a hellhole right? However, I must say that I respect their environmentalism and refusal to mix religion and politics.

...

Their foreign policy of dealing with China, which is slightly worse than the one in our world, is concerning, but hey, I don't really like the French, but they would be of the most use in an invasion. That's realpolitik in a nutshell, I guess. My overall opinion is neutral-negative. At least they aren't Turkmenistan, but they are no Estonia, either."
