Yes, the problem is that a lot of anime criticism and complaints are mixed together, and some are very hard to distinguish. Anime is generally the same thing as "American" cartoons, and so is their communities. Character development and details are pretty highly regarded in anime.

Anime and cartoons are the same thing. Same medium, same method of creation, similar creative input... With the only difference, if any, being execution.

Basically. The only difference is that the anime audience is generally older and the content a bit mature.

Korean anime is just batshit terrible. Basically just Ben 10 but 3D.

People say this and yet the most watched anime on TV in Japan are series that are aimed at children or families.

I don't know. The only anime I've ever watched was pokemon in the 2015. The head space I can use for school is being wasted on knowing all 1000

pokemon

I do read a lot of manga, and I have some friends who watch anime.

OK well, this is the first result for 'Anime TV ratings' on Google:

<https://www.animenewsnetwork.com/news/2...18/.172040> and, going over that list:

- Sazae-san: Very much aimed at families
- Detective Conan: Shonen, meaning aimed mostly at late elementary/middle school boys (some will say 'shonen goes up to 18 year olds', but IIRC in Japan 'shonen' as a demographic refers to the younger side of the spectrum, like most shonen series air in times equivalent to what Saturday morning cartoons were in the US)
- Chibi Maruko-chan: Aimed at young children
- My Hero Academia: Shonen
- One Piece: Shonen
- Doraemon: Aimed at young children
- Tropical-Rouge Precure: Aimed at 6-10 year old girls and 18 - 35 year old men, it's a long story
- Crayon Shin-chan: Technically the original manga is seinen (so aimed at adult men) but considering Shin-chan has been covered in the magazine Kindergarten, which is obviously aimed towards little kids, yeah the show is for kids and families.
- Oshiri Tantei: Aimed at young children

Look I already had the page opened, I needed to do something with it.

Edit: Alternatively, if you look at the timeslot any anime airs in Japan and if it doesn't air during the late night hours, then it's likely a series aimed at kids or families. (Certain exceptions apply though)

As I recall One Piece and MHA are aimed more at young adults than kids... Especially with the violence present in MHA. However, Japanese censorship is also more lax until it isn't for some absurd reason (looking at you, Blu-Ray release of JJBA Part 2, 3 and 4)

One Piece airs at 9:30 am on Sunday in Japan, Sunday morning anime is pretty much the equivalent of what Saturday morning cartoons were in the United States AKA very much 'for children'. (Case in point, Tropical Rouge Precure airs at 8:30 am on Sundays in a block literally called 'Sunday Morning Kids Time')

And in the case of MHA, well:

https://twitter.com/EIRIN_JP/status/1423515719111639044

The most recent MHA film was rated 'G' by Eirin, which means (just like the US G rating): All ages admitted.

Of course, according to their Twitter, the latest James Bond film has also been rated G so I mean _(ツ)_/ different standards in different countries.

Honestly, it's Japan, where you can get away with animating rather graphic scenes of truly awful acts, but at the same time, you can't have cleavage in a videogame meant for the same audience you're attempting to entertain... Or part of it, in this case.

mfw turning off mobile view on NS doesn't fix the bugs with mobile input on the forums for forum posts, including editing.

At this point I am starting to question if these bugs are from mobile browsers being universally bad or if it's actually something with the site itself instead.

Wew. Also, going off-topic, has anyone else ever had to deal with people who staunchly defend certain ideologies to the point of denying reality? Like, for example, a person who defends monarchies as being the "absolute best and only way to rule a country with no corruption whatsoever" in spite of the fact that today the concept of a monarchy is dated, with most "modern" monarchies having a queen/king not as the head of state but as a sort of metaphorical ruler while a group below them does all the business of running the country... Or a (somewhat) true monarchy that is rife with corruption, even if there is a group below the monarch themselves running the show mostly on behalf of the ruler, with said ruler passing down commands and offering their intervention as they see fit.
