M.I.A. - Y.A.L.A

Listened to this album (Matangi, I think) last night. An...interesting listen. But I enjoyed it a lot.

The only M.I.A song I know has annoyed the crap out of me every time I've heard it, for some reason.

Pele-Olympic

Eh, not the most exciting post-rock, really. They at least add interesting sounds to a rather fairly straightforward post-rock sound.

Is it Paper Planes? ☐

Her music used to annoy me, but I've grown to appreciate her...unique style, to the point where I actually like it.

Yeah, Paper Planes.

I might be able to get used to her eventually. I've had my fair share of things I got used to and appreciated, making them become some of my favorite albums of all time. But not in a hurry to try to.

For a while, that was the only song I liked from her, I hated the rest of her stuff.

Does anyone else have any suggestions for me, in regards to instrumental, melodic post-metal?

Russian Circles. Probably my favorite fully post-rock/post-metal band. Recommend all their albums. They're all fairly short. Their latest being a mere 37 minutes long.

Jesu, which is like post-rock, post-metal, sludge metal, shoegaze, and electronica clashed together in one. Also a favorite band easily. Recommend all of his albums.

Two songs from Sigur Ros' most recent album actually have a post-metal vibe to them. Though so does the 2nd half of Untitled 8.

Mogwai has at least one song in that realm

Not sure this one by Pg.Lost really counts, but the song is awesome anyway.

Aaand that should do for now before I go too far.

That was my initial reaction, too. You can tell she's talented, but the music is a little mainstream and gives into those moder pop tendencies from time to time. I prefer the slower songs on the EP (e.g. "Coffins," "Vagabond"), and "Imagination Infatuation" stood out to me on first listen, too.

I was listening to the Police on record, but my record player just ran out of battery power... ☐

And I'm too tired to go charge it right now.
