Write about the everyday aspects of your nation. I think it helps and might actually assist you in brainstorming concepts.

I already have brain damage I don't think it can get any worse.

Yeah I was meaning to write about actual life for a while but currently because of school I'm always burned out and can hardly think of anything to write.

Burnout is something worth trying to avoid. It might be cliché, but sometimes the best medicine is taking a break. We're living things, not machines, and it's appropriate to expect ourselves to need respite every once in awhile. Passion might press us to keep on writing, but taking a pause can often serve long-term creativity.

taking a break isn't an option when taking a break means you wind up with a week of late work you'll just need to finish later, unfortunately.

Ah, that's my bad; I spoke imprecisely. Unfortunately, systemic factors beyond our immediate control do take rest out of the picture for our schooling. I meant that it's appropriate to take a break from NationStates writing, if you feel burned out on writing in general.

Oh, yeah, I was just taking an opportunity to complain to no one in particular, too. And yeah, I agree there, this is an optional thing and if need be it's no crime to take a break from NS.

Or in my case, failed A levels that will end up fucking up my life.

I hope I don't fail my A levels, which is why I burn myself out in school and then feel the pain afterwards when my writing suffers and I only end up writing 2k words and get no closer to actually making the thing I want to make.

You'll do fine on your A levels too, I'm sure. Not comparable because I'm on a different continent than you but if it's anything like AP you should probably be fine.

Ok I fucked up my self-expectations when I wrote an RP post that was 10k words in a single night. Probably not my finest hour.

Yeah they'll probably be fine, and honestly I have no problems with most of them since they're all offering time to revision and are providing help for parts where quarantine fucked with education. More encouragement to stop my funny self-deprecation also always helps.

Wack.

I didn't wanna have a shit ton of student debt (hooray American educational system...) so I never bothered to go to college so I haven't been at school since I was like...16? Due to technicalities I graduated during 10th grade, basically.
