If its mandated by the government (might call it privateers instead), then nope. No punishment. If not, their vessels siezed (and stolen materials), and must do labor until they gained enough to cover the price of the materials they've stolen.

Accidentally killing a fellow hunter during a hunting.

Would be punished for 5 years of manslaughter. Depending on if they were hunting on prohibited grounds, another 8 years would be added.

Depends: if fought for a terrorist, enemy or rival country or a criminal group (these ones determined by the Ministry of Defense and the Ministry of Public and National Security), life sentence in a military prison. If committed war crimes: death sentence through firing squad. The judgement for such crimes is done by the Imperial Central Military Court, rather than a civilian one.

As per current copyright laws, a fine not exceeding $100,000 decided by the court is levied on the defendant. However, copyright law is rarely, if at all, enforced.

Judge is kicked out of job. Of course as a compensation, he gets to live in a comfortable jail cell for maybe... 5 to 10 years. An offer he can't refuse. What do ya' mean, what if he sentenced someone to death? Death sentences are only for most heinous crimes with 100% proof and not only by judge but also jury decision.

Remember, the fact, that we are semi-anarchy doesn't mean, that ya' can go around and rob random people. We still got law and order, loose as they are.

It's not part of our canon but we have similar laws, grave breaches of which are punishable by death by firing squad or hanging.

Private citizens can't do that. Punishment of 15 years in jail minimum, maximum penalty of being set on fire for international attention. We don't talk about the Corporation doing it

Deepfaking YL into saying a sentence against their public policy?

Here next to no one would believe such proof (which is also a reason why many Lakan government documents and statements are hand-written and in extreme cases hand-written by blood of person who is proposing said document. No one would care for some deep fake, so not a crime in this case.

Creating fake explicit imagery of YL and attempting to politically bribe them?
