Aesop Rock-None Shall Pass (Listened to, liked because it was unique hip-hop, but need to listen to again. And it's hip-hop so I can only listen to it so much, anyway)

OutKast-Stankonia. Even when I was younger I loved Ms. Jackson, though that could have easily been because of the music video...It's a great music video for a kid. Haven't listened to all 24 songs yet... Busdriver-Jhelli Beam (Listened to, may be one of my favorite hip-hop albums, but apparently I like weird hip-hop more than others). Busdriver-Roadkill Overcoat (The one I need to listen to) Gnarlz Barkley-The Odd Couple. Mixture of hip-hop (with no rapping), soul, and such like that. You may like it but I dunno. Loved this album when I was like 13 or 14, so it still has a special place with me. Don't care for their first so much, with the exception of a few songs (Like Just A Thought)

There's probably others I could throw your way but those are the main ones.

Mum-Marmalade Fires

Decent. Not great, either.

Aesop Rock and OutKast I've heard a few songs from...wasn't really feeling it but I should give them more of a chance. I hear non-stop praise about OutKast. Busdriver is...a little too weird for me, and I haven't heard anything from Gnarls Barkley yet (though, I'm looking up some songs now).

I lean more towards alternative and underground hip-hop, and gangsta rap.

I really don't have a lot of other hip-hop. Most of the others are very experimental or industrial hip-hop and I'm not sure if I see you liking that.

You got the 4 Dalek albums which I rather enjoy, but they're all very industrial overall (And shoegaze....). If you wanna give them a try I recommend "No Question", "Forever Close My Eyes", and/or "Spiritual Healing" (The first 3 I heard)

Then you got Death Grips and you probably know the story of them...crazy experimental/industrial hip-hop with rap vocals that verge on the punk realm. Definitely something I can't listen to regularly, but I still appreciate them.

Then there's Gorillaz, which again is very experimental hip-hop. Gorillaz and Demon Days by them are both very good in my opinion (Don't really care for them much after that, though Plastic Beach is okay just ends up featuring too many hip-hop artists for me. What I liked about Gorillaz was the fact they're hip-hop with not much actual rapping. The Fall is just meh, but it was a free album to fans, so eh) Why? is just bizarre. Not really sure where you would start because I need to re-listen to him myself.

And on the subject of bizarre...cLODDEAD. May be my favorite hip-hop album, but it doesn't fit into stereotypical hip-hop realm at all. Has the vocalist of Why? in it. I'd recommend starting with "Pop Song"

That's if you care about any of these ☐ I literally gave you the entirety of my hip-hop recommendations (Unless you count some of Beck's hip-hop stuff, but he doesn't really have full albums in that realm)

Mum-Guilty Rocks

This ones good, too. Think I'll give the album a 7/10 because it lacks something from their earlier days with their old vocalist, but it still has some really solid songs.

Probably won't check out Gorillaz though. I don't like hip-hop without rapping, unless it's instrumental.

"Loser" is considered hip-hop ish, along with some of his other stuff. He jumps around a LOT. He also has a funk album...His new singles (For an album other than the one he just released, with is a "sequel" to his more folk album) are more electronic...

Blue Sky Archives-Crash Your Face

Wish more of these guys were on here so I could listen to the like...3 songs out of their 9 I actually enjoy. Which unsurprisingly has the female singer singing more than the male...I don't think he's very good but I like her singing Cough and think she's cute cough, and her voice surprisingly works for mellow post-rock music AND synthpop...And she sings quite a variety in both of them.

Also I'm a sucker for singers who actually sing with their natural accent instead of singing without it
