The Gemeanwealth of Man. I learned that when the Commonwealth fought the Third Kingdom Drules, it went to extreme lengths to win its quick and decisive victory. The Commonwealth depopulated four planets, killing all 1.7 billion resident Drules, and this was considered acceptable simply because the planets weren't habitable for humans as well as Drules.

Slight correction, the majority were simply expelled. Of the 1.7 billion, only a few million Drules were killed during the expulsions immediately after the war, though the number killed during the planetary incursion campaigns (including the orbital bombardment and occupation-period killings) likely at least two orders of magnitude larger.

The Nevertopian government is officially committed to "religious pluralism" and normalising different faiths living alongside each other within the society. The state itself is secular, and freedom of religion is a constitutional right; however, few Nevertopians regard religion as an important aspect of their life, and faith generally is considered a private, rather than a public, matter.

with few limitation or interference. The practice of religion is now generally considered a private matter throughout society and the state. With Mekhanism and Ortothanism in decline, Nevertopia has become a post-religious, Linksecular state. The majority of Nevecians consider religion to be unimportant in their daily lives, but still welcome the influence of the benign gods of the pantheon."

Leskya: From the economy factbook, I learned that Leskyan communes consider nutritional self-reliance a high priority. Communes that aren't able to generate at least 2,000 calories per person per day are called ĉantaĝita, or "exploitable." This is part of a disinterest in capitalized economy where production and life are separated, i.e. Leskya doesn't want some communes to be producer communes and other communes to be consumer communes. Instead, ideally every commune and every Leskyan participates in agricultural labor to produce food for themselves and their locale.

According to certain historical accounts, the people of Liagolas were set upon by some outside invader that threatened the lives of everyone on the island. They had to unite in order to drive the attacker away, and the idea that unity was important was taken to the point of utter insanity.

Given what things have happened on various pacific islands because of the Pacific Theater of WW2, I would not put it past them... but even this seems rather excessive.

That Diffusion was caused not by a change in the universe but was caused by evolution instead. How did it evolve in such a short timespan, though? But then again, I shouldn't really be asking you about this, since this had happened in my universe during the ages of lore.

Since there's only one factbook that's actually completed (the others are placeholders and lorem ipsums), I'd say that they're somehow connected to events on a far-off Earth (since they are on a different planet) that happened in the 24th Century.

Learned that Quartia and Karafuto has been working in red panda conservation for some 30 years, since 1984. It's interesting that they would go so far to sustain a species that doesn't seem to be native to their region, but it seems to be because Karafuto's bamboo environment was the perfect place for red pandas to thrive. Glad to see the red pandas are bouncing back thanks to the conservation project.

The Ghesites have more or less been chilling in the Kiu Ghesik Basin for the past God knows how long, keeping to their lifestyle of traveling from place to place on horseback and not pursuing permanent settlement. This is directly contradicted by their neighbors to the North and South who have followed more familiar paths of "civility", building cities and engaging in mass trade. Of course as all "advanced civilizations" do, the foreigners have been pushing to incorporate Kiu Ghesik into themselves in a sense, forcing them to take on their traditions and lifestyle, something a good number of Ghesites are against.

All in all, permanent settlement and city consoomerism cringe, embrace based nomadic wandering 🤔.
