Allison: The crusaders against the census-takers, now where have I heard this before? Honestly, I don't know anymore, I have visited several different places. You are all just jealous because you don't even have a single green badge for yourself. How woeful, haha! All right, all right, I am not just here to be anti-anti-NS stats, see what I did there? Kasren Vereyn, you have established quite a legacy in this world, and with the many other worlds. The fact that you have have been leading an empire that is millions of years old, and with a lot of people and assets under you, speaks volumes about the endless and vast possibilities of your nation. The Fate has definitely declared you as "An Awesome Dude", so... hey there! ^^ Good to see that fashion did not change that much for millions of years. Suits and ties are very, very eternal, and I am glad someone agrees with me. I'm sorry to hear that someone has tried to assassinate you, so I can do you a favor of throwing them into a room where they will never starve, age, or need sleep. The catch is, they are glued to a seat and forced to watch the worst movies the Omniverse has to offer. Put them in there for 10 days and they go nuts, so try 60,000,000 years. I have to go now, duty calls!

OPINION OF GWEN TRACER HEPBURN ...

She fell into a black hole and became an omnipotent and omniscient being? Alright, first of all, I find that highly unlikely. That's not how black holes work. Second of all, she really reminds me of the Mechyrdians in some ways. Both she and the Mechyrdians have the ability to enforce their nations' policies on the rest of the world, except, of course, the Mechyrdians are much more limited in this regard. Secondly, they're all bark and no bite. In none of my intel-gathering has this "Fate" ever actually used her abilities to carry out one of her threats. Sure, it must feel nice to threaten one's enemies with destruction, but why just do that when you could feel even better by actually destroying them?

Now, I compare her to the Mechyrdians, but let's look at some differences too. She is a lot more powerful than the entire Mechyrdian military, save maybe their Menneball. She has the ability to literally rewrite history. That terrifies me, never mind, I'm not going to admit that. Besides, she'll never use it against me, or any other nation within this iteration of the Milky Way. So there's no reason for me to worry.

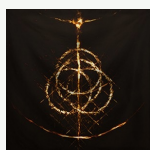

Anyway, my opinion of Hepburn here is not positive, but I don't really care enough to feel negatively about her.

Yes, altered I believe something resembling a Windigo in appearance as it was the one thing that haunted my dream, but I learned to not fear this form at the end, only to adopt it as my own as when they kept running their tests my body seemed to forget what to do as they never allowed me to take off my eye wrappings it was eternal darkness.

Mentally altered I would say I have been, you can see it in my speech as it flickers in an array of personality, but its not always noticeable.

And as for my relatability towards my people, I have proven my worth to my people, they first feared me as Lowbloodians fall to their beasthood in cases some turning into monstrosities such as I, but they lose all sanity and will in the process. I have not. Who in their right minds would kill for fun? Of course, it is hypocritical of me, a leader who had dragged my country into two wars, to bash killing, however I do sincerely believe that killing is a last resort, when one needs to defend oneself, or help their friends and allies escape from death. Killing for fun is, to put it mildly, a very dangerous way of thinking."

QUOTE

"To begin with I am surprised that a Leader of a nation would choose to maintain an additional occupation alongside their nominal occupation. A nation is something of a child in theory that requires constant monitoring to adhere to its needs, but maybe my experiences differ? For the most part, I lean mostly positively towards Mr. Smith.

I approve of his policies made so far, as well as his decision to withdraw troops from foreign soil so far from home. While I am all for Interventionalism for... less than savory reasons, such actions require planning and forward-thinking if anything fruitful is to come of it, entering guns blazing simply won't do. Although the decision to invest in Wind Energy is ill-advised, the turbines will be expensive to install and expensive to maintain. It will cost more energy to maintain those wind turbines than they will create, all things being equal 4 billion dollars is not nearly enough to keep such projects afloat unless the Nacrad Dollar is more valuable than the US?

Anyway, Nuclear Energy is the way of it for an MT nation."
