Julia: Dad, I'm fifteen!

King: Not you guys, literally...I meant the military. And the Americans. It's always the Americans.

Queen: Like a proxy war?

King: Their leader is psychotic; that's why they're classified as a psychotic dictatorship.

Queen: Yes, but--what about our crisis?

King: I'm already on it--let me dial our American friends--

Julia: Christ, I miss the cold War.

Symbol of the Directorate

The Statement on Ilia

"Huh, just a few days ago we didn't know that such a person even existed. And yet there she is - apparently a former politician, prominent one at that, and an assassin... Wow. So, where do we start first? The backstory, then."

"She grew up in a very militarized environment since the beginning - that's actually... pretty good. It is one of the best places to grow up, as you will most likely not turn into a spoiled brat about which the parents will be ashamed later on. It seems that this Kal'Shazzar offered her people an offer which they rejected, and it took only hours to demolish a structure which had been built over a millennia. Let's just say that we don't want any businesses in matters of space empires. Either way, it seems that she deserved the position she has right now - she volunteered to experience something with transcendental pain and risk of fatality in exchange for a reward of physical enhancements. A single Chiss is still pretty powerful."

"Now to personality... It seems that she has a high level of self-awareness about how little power she actually has, because the last remnants of old worldview were shattered by that... event. While her no-nonsense attitude and lack of humor might come off across as heartless and detached for some, but in reality she cares a lot about how those students are doing. Such qualities are appreciated by the Directorate. That said, we are not sure how to view her redirecting her anger towards some object or person - sure, her anger is cold, but anger is anger. While not the person to go in a mental breakdown too easily, her enemies should always keep out an eye for her."

"A technocrat and meritocrat? The first bit is sometimes associated with Georgy Malenkov, who is not viewed positively there, but technocracy on its own seems like a desirable view. Her investing in education and militarism are good choices - those will later repay with more than you put in them. Isolationism is also not too bad - don't go around the world and poke bears which are stronger than you, after all. Overall, we view her in a neutral light - sure, she is good for her job, but something tells us that we wouldn't get along."

What's the use for an idealist in a cruel, insane world? Montgomery could only stare at the morning sunset while the killings happened around him. The Brigade, the Aristocracy, and the Regency - all led by insane men who believed in what the Patron preached. Montgomery thought to himself that he is different from all the Futurists yet the corpses buried six feet underground would care little about it. Slowly yet surely, he could feel his mind slipping away as the insanity and bloodshed continues.

"They are a council republic like us but what is the use of such people's council if the masses do not have a voice in it nor their processes truly transparent? All I see is rule by Soviet apparatchiks who are too old to understand what today's generations wants as well as the present political realities of today's world. I see it as a betrayal to the ideals of direct democracy and communalism. Vote rigging and authoritarianism? What is this, a Soviet nation but in flag? I do not know who's actually the top dog in this council but I view them as traitors to the system of Soviet councilism. Damned oligarchs."

comment of my incredulousness will gradually shift to averse sentiments towards Herr Montgomery and everything he believes. Establishing a settlement with a constitution based on his anarcho-syndicalist beliefs, 'horizontal-based hierarchies' with rudiments of direct democracy is like building a house but not with the right building materials and atop of a dune. The house is doomed to cave in, and without effort. The infighting in the People's Council is one major problem if fighting a war against an army of murderers led by a literal murderer is hindered by squabbles in the government and the complacency of the people. Herr Montgomery is placed between a rock and a hard place—one is political fighting and the other a people unenthusiastic to fight their enemies, what more can I say that these are implications of his downfall?"
