We would not consider that a crime. Now how and who you use it against, that could go anywhere from public commendation with guest lecturing spots at high schools to public flogging or execution by hanging. Its really all about how you use it.

Genocide has a minimum sentence of 20 years(with parole offered) and no maximum sentence(currently, the maximum is life without parole, but the death penalty would be applicable if reauthorised).
This is in addition to restitution and punitive fines.

Legal to do so, being that it was protected by free speech laws and the Supreme Court ruled a law banning defacing government propaganda unconstitutional in 1965.

The government official the criminal impersonated gets to decide the punishment. This is usually a public beating/torture carried out by the official followed by the death penalty. If the official doesn't give a punishment, the default punishment is public torture and then execution.
