Forum 7 actually taught me alot about my flaws, and some of the criticism towards my behaviour made me a better person overall. Otherwise it's fun to roleplay with people not confined to a region. Some of our standards are a bit too high. The vast majority of new players are called "summies" even though they are new and still discovering the site. Heck, I joined this forum very late at about 1.4 billion citizens with a very good knowledge about Nationstates and yet I got called a summerposter. Let them grow with the site. Be nice and kind rather than be brash and witty to newer people.

I honestly think f7 is a very toxic place overall, with constant overflow of massive anger and hatred which I admit to partaking in, but we could improve. We could promote a more positive outlook on it, and make it more than the inside joke. We just need to be willing to work with each other.

Nah. Deleting it seems fine. 😊

There is this one user who is weirdly obsessed with the numbers from 1-10 in conlangs.

How do I know this?

Because they've sent me multiple TGs over the years asking for the numbers from 1-10 in this nation's fictional languages lmao and they have a Google Site with a goddamn shitton of conlang numbers from 1-10.

The same guy came by my region with the same spiel about a year ago.

When they say they base it off of ANs flag but they base it off your actual nation instead.

I take a break for a couple of days. Log in. Post a comment of F7. Somebody replies, they put a /skip. But some noob skips me anyways. That's happened to me several times in a row now, to the point I don't even try posting again afterwards. It's almost as if I got hexed after I cut off some internet voodoo shaman while walking in the subway or something.

Terminal decline feels like a dangerous level of understatement tbh. Unfortunately the eternal COMD has created an eternal summer and we are all doomed to suffer under the gaze of children who just figured out what numbers are. The number of nations that are generic space empires or Earth-based powerwanks formed by super individuals (self-insert characters) is vomit inducing. If you're going to RP as a powerful state then make it interesting and convoluted instead of inserting yourself as an edgy all-powerful unifying ruler.

Not enough people embrace the divided super state era where everyone has their fingers on the end civilization button and has pressed it a few times and are perfectly willing to press them again if the grilled cheese sandwiches aren't delivered on time or a specific yogurt goes out of stock.

Akschually the appropriate term is "man-child" thank you very much. We can write in barely complete sentences thank you very much, there is a vast difference between children aged 15-18 and children aged 11-14. the latter appears to be disproportionately represented by "summerposters", whose numbers have been inflated by covid.

Idk, but I do feel like I've been sub-consciously designing the contents and UI of my factbooks around the assumption that people like to skim read. Thus the very large subtitles, images, and quote boxes (and hopefully it baits people into reading things even if only a little more). I guess it also influenced the principles behind Pasca and the gang, as I don't want him to be easily tagged by common political labels like "right", "left", "liberal", etc, with particular emphasis on American bipartisanship.
