Its been a while since I got to do one of these things. So the next person is Anatoly from the Foehn Paramilitary. Someone who grew up quite an idyllic childhood... well as idyllic as growing up in the Soviet Union under a strict catholic family can be. You're from Leningrad right? Last I heard about that city in my world is that the Great Northern Republic is trying to rebuild it. But lets go back to your life. So yeah, you grew up with a pretty alright childhood until you became 17 and were forced by the government into the army so they could throw you in a meatgrinder later down the line. At least you were just a spotter for the artillery, which meant you were pretty far away from any danger. Back in my scouting days I also had binoculars, so that's one thing we both have in common I guess.

After your training was over, you returned to Leningrad and got lost because you didn't had an address. How have you not memorized your own home address? Were your parents that protective of you? Actually, that makes perfectly sense.

Unfortunately, one day in 1982, the life you always dreamed, as warronger Romanov wanted to conquer Europe in revenge for their loss in the Second World War. At first, advancement into Europe was quick for you. While artillery is a pretty nasty thing as an operator, you were so far from the frontline to really notice. One day, you get a taste of the true cost of war. You probably already know what I'm talking about, and I'm not going to get into full detail as that experience must have been pretty traumatic.

Eventually, you won the war. But you didn't get to come home. Instead, you saw the world you grew up in end by a power-hungry machine. Because of that brain-frying freak, you are now stuck in an icy wasteland where you have to guess some crazy paramilitary leader. Its something that unfortunately a lot of people experienced shortly after the war in my world, especially if you're in a place affected by nuclear winter and have a leader who developed radiation-induced brainrot.

Anatoly, I feel like you had to leave your home behind and endure the horrors of the apocalypse. While I personally never saw the end of the old world myself, I heard stories of my grandparents who did. I hope that one day, some semblance of normalcy returns to your life.

"You sir are what is known as a Party Pooper. The worst part is that I cannot even find it within me to blame you for your stultifying demeanor. Your parents denied you the education you should have had, and instead gave you an unconscious inclination to seek out drudgery and drear. You are caught in a mind-numbing cycle of toil and trouble, even in your executive position guarding your leader who forces you into maintaining a completely static environment with as much pure aggravation as possible! I worry that this might have become a comfort zone for you, in that you are doing something that you have some understanding as to how and you are somewhat good at it.

"The problem is that your occupation seems bent on grinding whatever constitutes your soul into a fine mushy paste. Comfort zones are meant to be left, sir, and you need to flee. I prescribe a vacation, preferably somewhere tropical and devoid of communications infrastructure. Go fishing. Lie on the beach. Throw a ball. Drink something that burns as it goes down your throat--no, vodka is ubiquitous where you are, so that would not be a change. Drink something that has actual flavor and maybe even some small amount of fruit in it! Demand that said drink be provided in a coconut! Turn that coconut into a bong! Smoke leaves taken from plants of suspicious provenance! I will even spot you the costs, as I feel these things to be medically necessary and in your best interests.

"Wow. A part of me wants to pop on down there just to see how badly your world fucked up. It is all well and good to read about the devastation and the repercussions of stupid people with big red buttons, but without seeing it for myself it is all just... so abstract. It is a bad situation, and I can see that you do your best.

"That said, I just... hee hee hee... you are in Belgium of all places and you have a problem with waffling! HAHAAHAHA oh that is glorious. He who hesitates is lost, dear friend, and you are in a situation where lives ride on every decision. Doing something is better than doing nothing, and you cannot afford to get hung up on which option is better or which one will cost more in the long run. Your opponents are not psychic... unless that is a mutation that can happen. Be faster than them, and don't worry about making mistakes because failure is a thing that has to happen if you intend to make things better. How would you know what needs to be improved, otherwise?" -Prime Archivist Balmorethere

"Probably among the most peculiar and... how do I put it... quite interesting men I've ever known. For starters, 58 years in the military? I remember being the Army General of my country, but the fact that this man served almost 6 decades in the army now is just fantastic! I am 58 years old now, so he's been serving for as long as I've been alive. Secondly, the general fact that this man has so many abilities I could only dream about... it just makes me... wow! And I'm not going to ignore the fact that he created something called the 'Test of Potential' when he was four, and the 'Test of Control' at 10. I have a feeling this guy's a child genius, which is very impressive. Yet despite all this, I have found some problems, especially in regard to his views. For starters, 'radio' is not a color. Secondly, I'm for what he's against, from religion to conservatism. He has clearly found himself some trouble with a few religious folks. Secondly, beatboxing entire symphonies? Why would you do that? Classical music is still wonderful without beatboxing! Oh, and I see he shares the same name as our founding father's surname. His name is Kais Al Abidine Baldemore by the way.

The Prime Archivist Balmorethere is among the most interesting men I've ever seen! 58 years of military service sounds quite impressive, as well as creating what I assume were inventions as a child and possessing abilities that I, let me repeat it, would dream of having. Quite an exotic figure."

"Waldemar Rochester of Crossoveria. A prime example of human foibles. A history of violence, waging pointless wars against his fellow humans abroad while various leaders toppled one another at home. Indeed, it was by violence that he himself came to power, backstabbing the latest backstabber. His rule is not particularly encouraging either, given his autocratic tendencies and continued use of violence against enemies both real and imagined. His regime is characterised by this tendency, favouring the preservation of existing power structures to the detriment of the future, not particularly surprising coming from a human government in our view. Yet even in this fails, as demonstrated by his squabbling with the president. We suspect it is only a matter of time before someone decides to overthrow him in turn, the cycle of violence within which he has lived his life finally consuming him for good."

A fairly impressive line of service if my assumptions are correct, I am sure that they have earned the respect of their fellow countrymen through their various campaigns, strange that he had a sudden turn on the matter, although I cannot make any claims of how bad his country's army had deteriorated at the time.

The fact that this led him to conspire against his government and rebel speaks either how bad the situation was within the country, or his own rationalization of his acts. Either way I cannot properly make the validity behind this act, any wise ruler should in theory condemn any rebellion, but I in good conscience cannot do so if the wronged people have a valid reason to take to the sword. I see that he seeks to aid criminals to repent for their crimes, there is validity to it, after all, every man should be able to find redemption, I only worry if this is born out of good counsel or hapless naivety.

Strange that I have not heard of his book, perhaps it hasn't reached our end of the world, presuming the claim is any degree accurate."

"Just... How the hell does he interrogate someone by touchin' his head? Yeah, I know, he got paranormal abilities, but I really want to know, how do they work. Just in case someone like him tries to get inside my head. But I believe, that due to me being drunk and stoned, this won't just work for shit. After analyzing him, I have reasons to believe, that he is like me, but far better. I mean, he possesses knowledge and creativity, plus instincts for fighting. All are immense. He could just predict all foe's movements and create a web of masterful counterattacks even before the battle starts. I have challenged and defeated many warriors, with my crowning achievement so far being Shawn Bjornson, who was our Overboss and one of the greatest warriors. And here is this man - Balmothere, a man, who could easily humble and defeat me even at my own fighting style. I will just face it, that he is better than me. But, I'll still accept his calling, should he wish to challenge me. What he cannot do however, is to disgrace me for there ain't no shame in being defeated by such a mighty foe. But if one somehow wins, through strength or cunning, then this is a great honor. I'd rather learn from him though.

Christian have the reason to consider him Antichrist, because with his preaching and abilities, he matches his description in the section about the apocalypse. He'll be beloved and such... While some other people will consider him either a deity or a powerful sorcerer. Or an alien. Or perhaps something else. Enigmatic and extremely powerful." -Overboss Liam Navarro

"Like many of the dossiers I receive from the world, I am unable to discern every facet of the information, but I come away learning a lot about the people I read about regardless. This Liam, this "Overboss" seems to be an interesting fellow, and look! To all the doubters and naysayers who have decried me for having bastards look at what one can achieve, their birth does not shackle their ability! I may not know what a rifle is but I understand what the term shoot is in relation to, so wherever this person hails from, they have access to firearms.

Wherever his land is, they are an educated people clearly, even if it's only to the standards of a barbarian university if someone from an agricultural background is able to attend one then their society clearly values an intelligent populace. I agree with his presumptive distaste of studying, it is grueling and boring work indeed, but needed work, life cannot be all about fun after all, adulthood is full of duties to one's people, country, and oneself. I'm surprised that they know of Heracles in his land, with their prior mentions of art I wonder if this Renaissance we all share has spread to his people as well.

The dossier refers to the Franks, if nothing else that gives me an idea of their proximity. A shame that in his labors he would lose an arm, such a crippling event so early in life must be frustrating, even if he gets something to replace it. A bit troubling that Crusaders attacked some place he was residing at, I heard no murmurs from the Patriarch of Rome over anything like this, then again it could have been some unsanctioned Crusade....

I am stunned that a people who value intelligence so much would turn to combat over who will rule, but who am I to judge the practices of foreigners, the fact that it is a bloodless exchange (At least intent wise, can't say blood was never spilled) shows a civility in the procedure. He seems to be a major force in reforming his country's bureaucracy, and I sympathize with his desire to return lost art from his peoples Golden Age, after all to this day the Venetians still hold onto the major works of art of my people.

I approve of this Liam fellow greatly, he seems like a smart and well meaning person and a great leader for his people, he has earned my respect."

The history books may have forgotten him, but we Aber haven't. His sacrifices and the trespasses against him encouraged us to proudly stand by our stance and mission in protecting those of the Faith against these self-centered heathens. One of our many Empresses during that era looked up to the Basileús as a father figure, and his death by the subhuman Mamluks devastated her, so much so that it had been her greatest desire to pay retribution for this Islamic-brewed travesty. Al-Nasir's descendants, as a result, have been slaughtered as a response by our Empress' descendants, for if the enemy lands an attack on one of ours, they attack all of us. And as long as there is any drop of blood of Al-Nasir on this planet, our mission remains unchanged. The late Basileús has our word."

Us Agapists, in the broader span of the multiverse, consider ourselves to be a Christian denomination simply due to how much overlap there is between the Kali Lexi and the Bible of other universes. This emperor has perverted its words to become nothing more than the opposition to one ideology and one ideology alone. He has somehow managed to combine feudalism and capitalism into something truly monstrous and slavishly devoted to tradition as opposed to the betterment of the people. Oh I can come to several reasons why someone who shows no respect for authority may have been passed over for promotion several times, not only is this person demented they are utterly self-absorbed in the worst of ways. I couldn't even begin to imagine what it must be like dealing with a man with no sense of decency for good social behavior, even my worst detractors would have to acknowledge that I at least pay due respect to custom and polite decor.

I know little of these people, but their use of the term Crusade just puzzles me, is this some bizarre heresy that sprouted up and are attempting to spread their lunacy through the world, I almost wonder if these are those unsanctioned Crusaders that attacked the Overboss Liamin the other Dossier I read. "Basileus... An Old World emperor, who lived a rather short, but bright life. He was born in that fancy purple room, but he doesn't look down on common folks, cuz his father was a good role model to follow, and so, Ioannes adopted his teachings and took them to the heart. Under his rule, he changed army doctrine a bit, focusing on mobility. I agree with that. While heavy artillery is useful, the army, that is too slow to get somewhere in time is not. Outmaneuvering the enemy and attacking from better positions is one of the keys to minimal casualties. Pyrrhic victories, despite being victories, are not worth it at best. At worst, they are utter defeat.

He invested in art and culture, and he decided to make taxation more into "Progressive model", which elites didn't exactly like. Not even a lil' bit. Which led to a serie of events after his death. This emperor cared for his people, while enjoying himself and having fun, but never letting these lil' sins to interfere with ruling. And he fought bravely. I gotta say, he'd fit in among the Overbosses. Cuz we also love to drink, eat lots of tasty food and spend nights with women. That's no vice in our eyes.

And I must object, that he is forgotten. He ain't forgotten, cause there are historic documents on him. He also was a patron of arts and did good things too. Maybe, he is not as remembered as some other. But he definitely ain't forgotten.

He died a warrior's death... Perhaps, when I die, I'll seek him out and meet him personally." -Overboss Liam Navarro

This is a very street smart mentality and a tough guy like Rocky Balboa! Nyan! He lost it due to fights with the Mafia and the Yakuza, and now his arm is now butchered and dead.

This guy "tough gangsta" says that he doesn't like "totalitarianism" and is pro-"freedom", and then he added in with red bold letters, "Red Bold Letters"! "whatever ideology it comes". Now this guy no matter how tough and strong a "gangsta" he is, is a Liberal after all! I know what would happen to this gangster and ghetto hooligan types! Aha! High Princess Ryeisse Schyi Yuri told this to me, he is one of the "lumpenproletariat", and he is going to be used by the bourgeoisie and the imperialists as scabs and to do their dirty stuff, like Al Capone.. and Al Pacino...

Like this guy is going to go on one of those Jackie Chan movies, and become one of the tough guys and bourgeoisie criminals, like those drug lord like Pablo Escobar and is going to be the enemy of our cute and beautiful anime protagonist! Nyan!

For BN: Take your pick (scroll down to see the list). Perhaps the most natural pick is Presidentess Elizabeth R. Sleet, but you're free to choose another as long as it's not labeled Work in Progress (WIP).

It is 1881, and America still dreams of its "manifest destiny" to rule the continent. The strange pilgrims claiming a kingdom in the Great Basin apparently have other ideas.

Ah, another one... Let's see...

Presidentess? Weird. I mean, the more formal title, regardless of gender or identity, is president and at times referred to as madame president if so desired for a female, with mister president for a male. But that aside, she is a bit... Odd.

While I don't mind her upbringing, hammering home strange ideals, it does worry me that she fully integrated religion and primitive supernatural beliefs into the system, further condemning her country to remain as is in terms of progress despite some moves to try to push forwards. Ironically. Religious brainrot aside, again, she does appear to rule with an equal hand, though I doubt I have the full picture. This idea of pushing women into the limelight mildly infers that men are being shoved aside in turn, unless I'm wrong, given a sheer lack of context. Here? We don't care what's in your pants, every man, woman, child is equal. Still, if only we could at least talk one-on-one, perhaps I could open her eyes to the opportunity of unrestricted science, given a lack of morals. After all, morals do hinder progress, even more so when ensnared in religious duties meant to serve some dubious entity who may or may not even be there at all.

"Ahh, let's see... her name is Laura Ortiz? Alright. At first, I honestly did not expect much from this woman, but I found out that there are some traits she has that makes her stand out. Well, for starters, the fact that she refers to countries as specific animals is something unique about her. You don't see that every day, do you? She also has a hardline stance against the United States? So do I! I didn't really believe that we would share a common enemy! I also like what happened to the military under her leadership, because it is necessary to defend ourselves against foreign powers. That being said, I have an issue with some of the things she does. It makes me infuriated to see her submit to such awful actions. There's something about it that just does not sit well with me. And some of the things she even does are banned here in Crossoveria. I'm also quite surprised that she ascended to the Presidency at such a young age. At 23 and you are already leading the country! That same thing happened with my wife, Marie, when she came to power back in 1981 during a coup. She was 18 at the time by the way, and how she got to power is quite a long story. So it's quite interesting to see something like that occur again. It really is. She's interesting as a person and even better as a leader."

"There are certain things about Mr. Rochester that I can appreciate. His commitment to anti-imperialism and the welfare of his people is admirable, and his desire and ability to protect them from outside forces is something I find aspirational. However, uh... this may well be the only good thing I can say about him. He explicitly runs an authoritarian government, going out of his way to impose his will onto his citizenry. There's nothing wrong with using some measure of authority if you have it in order to protect your people, but to explicitly advocate authority for its own sake as Rochester does? I find it very hard to defend.

And while he claims to be anti-liberal... well, his policies just prove that he's just one of their shittier variations. He's a capitalist and advocates for an equality of opportunity for people, and seems to like some measure of democracy; these are all that are required to be called a liberal. However, he's also a bigot who started a war on drugs. banned specific musical genres due to their 'degeneracy' or whatever, and executes certain minorities he doesn't like, which allows him to label himself as a conservative. It's a very neat trick that these worse types of liberals seem to enjoy pulling.

Honestly, the only reason he seems to be anti-imperialist is because he wants the ability to harm his citizenry all to himself. I'm having a very hard time imagining someone less capable of advocating for his people than Waldemar seems to be."

"And to imagine her wearing heavy power armor, that enhances her immense strength even further! I mean, she is even larger than Shawn Bjornson! Our largest leader. And can deadlift heavy weights... Damn, I remember, trying to lift with a cybernetic arm... It's not the best exercise, cuz everything becomes unbalanced and no matter how one trains, cybernetic arm will never grow stronger. One of the disadvantages of cyber limbs. But, instead, I can grab hot things with it and not care about burns.

What I think of this politically, is that we should to establish diplomatic relationships, based on mutual goodwill and other buzzwords, politicians use. Our Old Enthorean culture has been inspired by many cultures, and her's is one of them. If we start cultural exchange, this will only enrich us and Red Lake Circle too. I don't know, if Druidism will go well with our love for tech, even if we use advancements to make our nature more diverse and resilient, by modifying forms of life and utilizing technology for conditions enhancement, but I belive, the matters of faith ain't gonna sabotage the diplomatic effort.

So, it's decided! We will at least try to establish relations and start cultural exchange with Red Lake Circle. The preparations are complete, the only thing we need now is the response from Kiusareik. I'll cross my fingers and hope, that she agrees."-Overboss Liam Navarro
