Monkey 1100 got confused and thought he was monkey 12 due to him counting in binary. He gradually forgot his own identity and lived the life of monkey 12, until the real monkey 12 noticed that and shot the imposter.

Make sure not to forget this when we get to Monkey 12.

Monkey 1099 fell into a giant blender. It wasn't turned on, but it was REALLY giant, and he landed on his head and snapped his neck.

Monkey 1098 made an Among Us joke in my vicinity.

Yes, this is a threat.

Monkey #1092 was a female solipsistic philosopher.
"Never have I experienced another monkey thinking or feeling, except myself. I thus constate, that all other monkeys are "NPC-like" - there is no real other side. No other being exists except myself.", gesticulated monkey #1092.

"No, I am the only existing monkey, because I experienced nobody thinking, except me.
I cannot be sure, that anybody else except me exists", gesticulated another monkey.
"And that means, I cannot die, because I do not exist", gesticulated monkey #1092.

Man, was she wrong.

But #1092 has not died, yet.

"It totally makes sense", she gesticulated later to the same other philosophic monkey. "I wondered, why monkeys did things in ways HUMANS would do it. No monkey would ever speak an oral language or use a parachute in a battlefield. We just cannot. Monkeys die in the order of their numbers - with thousands of missing monkeys - or why are we at #1092 after about 5600 posts? Humans are too dumb to count as a group, I guess. I am just an image in humans minds - maybe in a forum game of another game called Nationstates. *Pause* Never could I have thought this - except if I am not real and somebody "told me" to do so. I thus cannot die. I am just a literary character. And maybe even the humans are."

#1092 broke through "the forth wall" and fell. Did she die? Well, guess...

This was one of the most creative ways I guess...

Monkey 1091 had a stroke from Monkey 1192's death and that Monkey 1091 wasn't Monkey 1091 at all, and how this supposed Monkey 1091 can't handle philosophy.
