Uh, some sort of prison sentence. Deepends on which kinda drug, how he did it (exploiting addiction for "additional favours", threats, dangerous impurities etc.), and how much. If his drug dealing caused some deaths he might get a separate charge for murder, which could cost him his life depending on several factors.

Producing cocaine (or other hard drugs)?

Theoretically, an unlimited prison or labour camp term or death under legislation designed to combat terrorism.
In practice, probably 5 to 10 years.

Defending the actions of someone who committed a neutral crime because the offender is LGBTQ+ and so is their victim.

What? Lawyers are legally protected - everyone has a right to an attorney, and I don't see what being LGBTQ+ has to do with it.

Incitement of insurrectionary acts is punished proportional to the actual or probable effect of said incitement. If people treat it seriously, expect a few years in prison.

Not necessarily a crime (if all guns on the ship are deactivated) but you'll either be stopped by the police and shoved to the ground in handcuffs or, if you refuse to stop, be shot in the head in the chest.

Any attempt to use the ship as a weapon would result in navy torpedo action.

It varies from state to state, but generally a $1,000 fine and at least two years in jail (or higher depending on how many people were put at risk).

Not a crime, as graves don't exist. Caleshan turn their dead into fertilizer.

That's very dependent. You can be fined a measly 100 dollars if it's just an unused wall you used, or you can stay up to life in prison if you put Nazi symbols on it.

Accidentally running over someone else and killing them without your knowledge.
