-The Sultan

"Unsurprisingly, I find myself objecting to the vast majority of the Sultan's political views. Firstly, Monarchy is an utterly idiotic way of choosing a ruler, as the mere circumstances of one's birth in no way guarantees that they are fit to lead. Indeed, both upbringing and a typically limited gene pool have historically resulted in detrimental individuals being granted absolute authority over an entire nation. I suppose his views on religion probably stem from a need to justify his position of power, calling upon an imaginary entity to grant him 'divine right' to rule over the people. He's also an imperialist warmonger, which is decidedly less than ideal. That said, he does have a few good ideas, such as his support of scientific development and opposition to fascism and slavery. Regardless, he must be removed."

~Premier Jingyi Zheng

AN:

"A religious fanatic and a war criminal, this Grand Master is even more detestable than the Sultan! He possesses practically no redeeming features, being an anachronism who is more suited to the barbarism of the dark ages than the modern era. Both his politics and his personal life mark him as a truly abhorrent individual, and I for one hope that he is swiftly removed from his position to face justice."

I do question his honor, despite his lovely weapon of choice, for he apparently called royal guards on his two brothers... was a good old-fashioned duel not in question? Yes, he was 16, but my son Giorno is 17 and he already has a dozen duels under his belt from the age of fifteen. You'd expect rapscactions his age to be settling their differences with their fists, like animals... but I'm straining too far. I admire the Sultan, and perhaps we could work out a trade. I think his aspirations are admirable, seeking to have a society that brings prosperity to the common person and built on reason.

However, I think his technocratic and pro-Chinese tendencies contradict his desires for democracy. China is a regime built on the backs of exploited workers, while technocracy clashes with democracy fundamentally."

But we all know, that hacking enemy skulls with a warclub doesn't count as a display of IT expertise.

"I tend to think, that many people may assume, that Holly and her friends are some sort of benevolent gods and there is a basis for that. They are deeply caring, they possess many paranormal and powerful abilities, and in case of Holly, she can create things with her will. I mean, she and her beautiful garden defy physics laws known in Skyhooked... perhaps there are other natural laws, we don't know of yet, due to insufficient development of theoretic basis and equipment. After all... there are many things, science has yet to explain or discover. Or maybe it's not all in our world, that can be understood with scientific approach? After all, the ways we humans used to think are limited in some way... I mean, we cannot truly comprehend infinity, for example, even with weed and LSD. And some of those, who tried too hard possibly went insane. Sapient AIs? I don't know if they can do so, because their logics are based off the logics of their creators, whether someone wants it or not.

Either way, I like her and her nice attitude. Too bad, she's reclusive a lil' bit, her garden could be enjoyed by far more people."-Shawn Bjornson
