Twitter is just a really sad place and there is no happiness or gain to be gotten from it beyond following artists or ARG's, or anything of that sort. Beyond those things it's just a horrific quagmire full of individuals who go online to be incomprehensibly angry, make terrible takes, and lash out at damn near everything. Having a follower base there is not exactly an accomplishment or a boon.

Hot take: complaining about the content you get on any social media where you can curate what you see based on what accounts you follow is dumb because why don't you just unfollow those goddamn accounts then?

Like I use Reddit somewhat actively and, when it comes to political communities, I've joined several left-wing shitpost/meme communities (and am a mod on one of them for reasons). Makes sense considering that I'm literally a libertarian socialist. But if I joined a bunch of conservative or anti-socialist subreddits and kept complaining about how my Reddit feed is full of conservative bullshit, I think most of y'all would go 'Well then leave those communities?'

First of all, I do not troll. Second of all, I am not sure you would like to compare the time I spend on NS to the amount of time that you and others spend on NS. 'Dodge a bullet' is literally in the dictionary. I used to do it all the time with Nerf bullets when I was younger. Also, as demonstrated by Mythbusters, it's literally just a matter of reaction time.

Are you actually comparing a fucking Nerf Gun to a firearm?

Yes, it is a matter of reaction time, as in getting the fuck out of the way before the other guy fires, not as in dodging during or after the trigger pull.

And you do troll, we see it all the time. You went in the fucking *military realism* thread to argue in favor of your bullshit, along with trying to enter serious RPs with your "But muh dodging" wankery. Do everyone a favor and fuck off, please and thank you.

The video states it's also impossible for a human to react that quickly, as the fastest reaction time was nearly double what was needed to dodge a bullet at 250 yards.

He also tries to play as an independent Northumbria in numerous RPs, including "2024: Cold Interbellum" (my latest RP) and "The Century That Changed".

Wrong. Her publicly-available, in-sig, in-profile Twitter account currently has 1,004 followers, and gets one or two likes per tweet. The Northern Independence Party currently has 59,100 followers, and gets hundreds of likes per tweet. So you are incorrect.

Stop bragging about Northumbrian independence. Even if the Northern Independence Party exists, I doubt it would be able to achieve an independent Northumbria.

Imagine being so pathetic that you check my Twitter for comments about your bullshit 'movement'. Go outside and touch some grass like for real.

Normally, I would welcome any attempt to balkanize the uk.

well, since I have no idea what a northumbria is, recently I've been seeing a lot more Anti-Slavery groups and nations (which is completely fair and makes sense), and I'm wondering if it came from dislike of that one guy with the blue-cross flag or if it was just a bunch of other combined factors

I, before the independence movement really took off, used to sometimes search for "Northumbrian nationalism" and related queries on Twitter. Not very often, as you yourself say that it was 'at least a week after'. Knowing it was you, I sent you a telegram very politely asking you to please contact me with your problems with me rather than subtweeting about them.

Also you might as well unfollow me if you're going to read my posts anyway.

I know who created that article. You are literally posting Northumbrian nationalist propaganda.

'dislike of that one guy with the blue-cross flag? Please do not confuse IC with OOC. I am not the captain of a slave ship IRL. Dislike of 'that one guy with the blue-cross flag' is founded upon many, many reasons, but Munkchester's internationally-illegal activities don't enter into it until someone's fishing in their mind for reasons to dislike me.

By the time Proudfoot came into the picture and I made yet another thread, all the NS leftists who would've loved it absolutely hated it. Other than one who repented and I have been reliably informed has a shrine to Northumbrian independence on their Discord server.
