I just realized that I've never actually listened to this album (Uprising) from start to finish, just in pieces...shame on me.

Same. Now I just turn the TV on and keep the volume on low (hearing all the noises outside creeps me out). ☐

There's all kinds of little noises by me: my dog, the house, stuff outside, etc. The silence makes it noticeable.

I was afraid of paranormal stuff when I was younger (no reason other than watching too many horror movies), so that probably has something to do with it. □

I strangely never really remember being scared of much of anything in the dark or at night, with some rare exceptions even now. Have gone outside a couple of times in the night and had this unsettling feeling for no good reason but it doesn't happen a lot.

We used to have dogs □

Now it is just cats making noise.

I live in the country so there's not a lot of stuff TO make noises outside. Except the rare sounds of coyotes but I haven't heard coyotes in forever for some reason.

I need to listen to more Nuclear Assault, so far I've only heard one album (Handle With Care, aka the one I'm listening to right now) and 3 other songs and gotta say, I really like this band.

I had a cat once, when I was 5...scared the hell out of me. She would jump up wherever you were sitting, get up in your face, and just stare at you...

We had her for a week and decided we couldn't handle a cat, so an uncle's friend took her. And I learned I was definitely a dog person, even though I was terrified of them at the time.

Never heard of coyotes be me, but there's literally a dog in every house on my block. They were barking like crazy the other night, so loud that I thought somebody was screaming.

Bob Marley & The Wailers - Forever Loving Jah

Seems like the 2nd half of the album are all some of my favorite Bob Marley songs.
