"You are an odd one, aren't you? Faced with hardship, allotted a life cursed by fate, and yet when least expected to fight you... chose to fight god. Well, that's ridiculous. A child with a mind warped by pain is... is in no way suited to lead a host. You, wolf-pup, should still be suckling at your mother's teat, not claiming to fight a deity. And this is barring the ridiculous nature of your claims to begin with. I know not why when faced with the presence of evil you instead of choosing to combat that evil decided that whatever deity you claim to worship must be at fault for it and thus deserves to die; the claim seems in and of itself wholly stupid. My own faith has no such compulsions, and I will not pretend to find your arguments compelling.

"Though... you are very kind, and you do otherwise act wise beyond your ears. Perhaps it is just maturity you lack, and you will come to be a great leader of men as you grow. We are not all so fortunate as to have parents capable of being good teachers in our lives- perhaps were we to have shared a father you would have learned better. Now, though, you seem distinctly.. wasted on your quest, no matter how kind or funny or caring or intelligent you are. You are a childish fool and I will treat you as such."

"Monitoring somebody like you would prove to be a real doozy, now wouldn't it? You don't have radio or TV, doncha? Ahem You don't have any shoes to fill, you have big boots to fill, so I eeeeeeh...guess that's why you emulate your late progenitor. Now on your other parent, I can't help but to try to get where you're coming from. I spent about six or seven years with my mother too before I was sent to the nursing center where everybody's moms took care of us all...whoops, I'm trailing off again?

You probably get a lot of flak for killing civilians, but there's no such concept in the distant past. It's disgusting. But still, I wonder, is it still bad if it can't be visualized as such. Come to think of it, neither does it matter much for the SAC or whoever runs the Soviet nuclear force either, or worse, they're mindful of it but wanna help that fatality line go up. Oh sorry. I'll focus on your present. Your deeds are self-defense, well mostly if we ignore the bit about raiding for self-gain, but hey, you're nomads...it's in the label. But speaking of the nuanced theme of technical progression being confounded with the even more ghostly term of societal 'progress', I do think your people's continued existence depends on how much you can keep information and how fast you can transmit it. Uh, I mean, information related to how to go up against your neighbors. Or how to buy and sell stuff, but you're already going there. Unorthodox behavior sometimes results in fortuitous situations and fortune favors the bold as they say here on Earth. Well, the bold or desperate that are well informed as we, the Anhu, would correct."

"First contact...? Fascinating. I am grateful to Nova for her -hm, I presume by the scare-quotes such pronouns are not minded by but also not particularly meaningful to Nova?-I am grateful for Nova's generous (if somewhat condescending) attitude toward us 'earthlings.' I don't know if I much like the idea that she and the Anhu treat us like a roadside zoo, but I suppose it is a far cry better than being bulldozed to make way for their own terraforming. And it seems that Nova herself is actually much more egalitarian in her outlook on the earthling-Anhu divide, which is likewise interesting.

"They have gone through a lot, it seems. I do not mean to asperse the Saucer Pilots' approach to 'harmonious living,' but as one who finds value in the human, or in this case mortal spirit, I am not sure how to feel about the chemical repressions Nova grew up with. But more stark than that is the tragic loss of her han, her compatriots. That she is able to move forward with that tragedy with a sense of humor speaks to the strength of her own spirit. I will not level criticism against her daredevilry at this time—I suspect she has leveled that against herself plenty.

"As for her personality, Nova seems surprisingly easygoing, though arguably a bit edgy. But those evidently have been strengths in her work as a cultural attache, allowing her to bridge the gap between American air force pilots and the Saucer Fleet's governing council. It is too bad you crashed in the United States, though, and ended up making them the proprietors of this rare knowledge... er, which is not to say that I, as Baizou's global ambassador, am not grateful for our relationship with the American republic. It's merely to say, er... ah, never mind that.

"Those are my observations of Nova. I think Nova is one who has been dealt a difficult hand and made the best of it, and has consistently not only valued the benefit of her people ahead of selfish interests, but also the benefit of strangers. That type of outward-oriented generosity is impressive in anyone."

I have nothing positive to say about this petty warlord, so I'll try to keep this brief. "Overboss" Bjomson reminds me of a youth going through his libertine phase: full of violent rhetoric against so-called "oppressors", pretending to be the boogeyman that tyrants fear, and yet there's no action, just a whole lot of talk. Bjomson hasn't even truly conquered anything, either; much like the old, ancient empires surrounded by barbarians, the Sky Reavers merely took possession of what lay open to everyone. They faced no significant resistance to expansion, and if they did, they would absolutely crumble.

Bjomson is nothing more than a small dog barking at a sleeping lion. Sooner or later, that lion will wake up and crush the Reavers, much to the benefit of the rest of the world.

"As for me, I'd rather not genetically modify my own brain and I can explain why. Altered genes don't affect phenotype only, they are all affecting the genotype, the hidden and they can be easily interlinked, and not only directly. One may affect different others, possibly even creating some sublethal combinations, or lethal ones, which can prove their lethality later. Not only that, but human brain is extremely complex, and there are always more than one way to alter some of it's characteristics, while altering other ones...

Damn, got carried away dudes, let's talk about Kal'Shazzar, this diverse dude, who was a villain and was a hero, was a poor cripple, and a rich king and experienced alot of different states of life. Even if he is a ceremonial leader, this unique variety of experiences helps him greatly at his job, allowing to look at a problem from many different angles and study it. I think, I should learn from him, for my vision is mostly limited to that of a delinquent hedonist or a warrior, who is loyal to his people and country and I may not always notice it. My knowledge and sharp mind can help, but it's better when combined with experience. And his multi role vision could help even in battle, allowing to think like the opponent, predict his moves, see weaknesses, openings, ways to attack and defend and to formulate more cunning and unpredictable tactics.

So even if he is a ceremonial leader, he is not to be underestimated."-

"There, there, if it is not the protector of the common people, the hero of the free world against terrorists and organized criminals, and the vermin of sovereign nations minding their own businesses... Mr. Bjornson needs to mind his own business more and keeps your noises to minimum. He is downright obnoxious to the good folk running exotic businesses like my friends and I in Monte Carlo here. There is no long-term good of acting like a busybody, you see? In the end, you might accidentally liberating people who do not want to be liberated. Freedom has become an overworked phrase... and sometimes I can no longer tell what it means and for whom it is spoken."

"You are a strong man, a street smart one at that too. But perhaps this is the time for philosophical pondering that does not come by drugs and alcohol. No, that is not in the realm of possibility. It is certainly possible, just not that much. Oh, hello there. I'm sorry, I was busy with a couple of things lately. Mr. Andrei Valeryevich Kruchinkin, Shareholder of the Garnet Group, The Order of the Red Night, I put it. I hope this doesn't alarm you; it's my duty to know who exactly I am speaking to - it's part of letting the other party know you are interested! Anyway, let me start off by saying that, well, you certainly are an impeccable and formal dresser. The organisation that you are involved in is certainly interesting. One would have thought that it is a secret evil organization, but that is the common theme when they see red hues. On the other hand, I have definitely done my homework. So you acknowledge alternate history and timelines, that means you definitely know about the existence of parallel universes, just like how we have acknowledged such a thing. That is quite fascinating. It certainly does make me a little uneasy that you all can blend in so well - if I didn't know about you, I would have taken you as an ordinary person, but I guess that was the purpose of it all. The cannibalism was pretty jarring, and I heard you just sacrificed someone in the name of the Order. Is that true? Oh, dear me. Well, I certainly do know where to look for you. I will just ask Jamie about it, and chances are good that she would have seen you in socialite parties here and there. As for further evaluation and conclusion, I am generally going to be neutral with you as I am wont to do. You do have to tell me about your life sometimes, just the non-classified bits if you would like. After all, my fascination is in people (or beings, to be precise) traveling across other worlds. It must have been nice, being unbounded by mortality, as the most of us are.

Russian Security Council

Ataman Stepanov's thoughts on Hong Lijing

She is the leader of Heavenly Kingdom - the most likely scenario in this case is that Hong Xiuquan's rebellion somehow managed to succeed, which also assumes that Christianity has a way bigger role in this timeline's China. Either way, it sounds like the early life of Hong Lijing wasn't too happy - her mother was never there for her as she died shortly after giving birth to Lijing, and although she had her father until the age of 13, Hong Shikai doesn't seem to have been a proper father figure and a loving family life, as he didn't seem to care much about the wellbeing of his daughter. Servants and tutors at least had a positive influence on her, and were likely the reason why she managed to get through those whole years in spite of depression and self-deprecation. In short, her life story is not exceptionally sad, but still a bitter truth which most children with unloving families face.

Heavenly Kingdom seems to face the same issues and be on a slow process of dying just like the Qing empire of our world - corruption, stagnation, all that yada yada. Seems that the young queen has chosen the road of trying to stem the tide, instead of sitting back and enjoying the decline, and purify her nation from all those ills before it is too late. However, it is not sure if her efforts will not be in vain in the end. The regent figure is a solid choice, and her being literate is also very useful, but her belief that someone can get pregnant from holding a hand is the peak showcase of superstition. To conclude, while she is not the brightest bulb in the box at times, she is still well meaning. Neutral-cordial, if not for the fact that anarchism loathes royals.

This message was approved by the Russian Security Council's public affairs communique. To find out more info about Ataman Stepanov, click here.

"In this world, there are bound to have people who think just like me! Your cousin Knut seemed like a dumb and stupid man. But you are a charming man. As well as a real crazy motherfucker as a berserker when you descended upon the Catholics of Chicago with your battle axe. However, you needlessly limit your power for what? Some premonition? An equally dumb successor as your cousin? No, it shouldn't be that way. You were a fool to believe that you shouldn't take total power... But your skill with the axe might compensate that."

"More often than not, the road to freedom is paved by control, and the road to peace is paved by war. It is just that some roads are under construction forever -- this might be one of them. It is always fascinating to see man in his finest, most natural state: survival of the fittest in a free-for-all scenario. I do, I truly do want to say that I will watch any other part of the world or the universe burn as long as the smoke does not get across my borders, but I still have more than reservations for Mr. Ibrahim. The Global Court rarely listen to our tragic backstories, unfortunately... and it is not in my code of conduct to compare our tragedies or morality -- not when blood is the currency of power."

"I cannot help but be fascinated by his ruthlessness and decisiveness, even if repulsed by... almost everything else. You need a nerve of steel to play the spy and bite the hand that feeds you, as well as to remain unbroken after years of fruitlessness. But in the end, you are just a man... and not even a good or great one."

Is our responsibility to give our lives for the advancement of science and humanity... I also have some coffee from Néa-sy, one hundred natural."

"You must be confused because nobody is talking about tea here. There is another place for it, and I must ask you to use the appropriate channel. Also, there is not an ounce of information about you. Come back when you have a dispatch on yourself."

PMT/Early FT - Decopunk. Zitravgrad is a crowned republic in a planet somewhere else in the universe. The formerly wartorn nation keeps a facade of normalcy and order while enjoying the societal and cultural decadence that marks the new Roaring Twenties. The paranoid authoritarian government tries its best to uphold order in the face of uncertainty, while its people want nothing more than a breathing space. A deal that works, but maybe not in the long run. |

Zitravgrad:

"Ah! Mr. Kazimir! He's quite the character isn't he? His life's all like - really full of twists and turns and stuff, also lots of moments I can only honestly say that they come out straight from a Latin crime drama, or a telenovela! Because there's almost always some saving grace at the end! Hey! A biographical film would be awesome! Or a series! Can I write it...? Wait, I wouldn't have time for that - bummer. Anyway! As much as I like to think Kazimir's such an interesting guy to read about, I'm going to be honest here, and I'm really really sorry for this - but I wouldn't trust him with my life, again - sorry! But I wouldn't want my neck to be in his hands"

"Wait a minute, I just got ninja'd! Fuuuu...! Okay Kofuku, calm down - what now...? Alright! So Francisco Franco, but he's mellowed! And that's good! He reminds me of Mario Stria, but at least he let go of the stuff he bet on in the past, unlike Stria, and that for legal reasons I cannot confirm or deny that he's my therapist... But anyway, he's just a guy who's reinventing himself to face a whole new world panorama, and he's done fine on his own terms. There's also how he honors his old friends wishes for his country, and I'd be a hypocrite if I didn't respect that kind of stuff"

"I... ah? Why am I being asked to give my opinion on a slave? It is a pitiful state of humanity she was subjected to, yes, but am I meant to pity this woman? Why? She is a victim of the foreign trade, not my concern. Other than that she is wholly unremarkable. A... what is the word... bureaucrat. One form of servitude traded for another, really. Naïve of her to think she's found freedom, but... eh, whatever makes her happy. When the sun sets on our lives we all mean precisely as much as everyone else, except to the people we love, and if she's found someone to value her then that's important, I suppose. Just... not to me."

"You know, I've worked with several other nations that have clan structures and tribalistic leadership positions, and I must say, the present-day Universe's space-age derivations do not fall far from the tree. In fact, they appear to have fallen backwards. In the primitive and brutal landscape Ari calls home, she is beset by all manner of death-dealing trials that us space-agers have forgotten, and she nonetheless leads through them with ease. There is no doubt in my mind that, if Ari had been raised among my own people, she would find herself in an equivalent position. Some might say she is brutal, and I agree she is by our standards; but it must be remembered that she lives in a brutal world whose standards of barbarism and cruelty are far worse than what she has shown."

I am still reclusive, I like to think I am, but I suppose it is about one of those times when I learn to go out and talk to others a little. Someone who can virtually control their stage through his sermons and speeches is pretty impressive, and perhaps even formidable, one would say. To be able to sell ideas, to be able to increase his influence to the others around. I normally don't like doing that, not for myself, anyway. As long as people leave me alone while I can still talk to them, that is fine. For this, I am neutral on them, but truth be told, a little wary.

"Then again, perhaps, access to her gardens could bring me some light on this subject. Yes, I shall negotiate the terms of gaining the rights of passage for Sky Reavers to her garden. Even if this is a one time diplomatic passage, this would be nice. And as a main argument in this passage, I shall use my charm and politely ask to let me in and hang out for a while, and I shall promise not to litter there and take all the bottles back with me. Perhaps I could ask her about the nature of this cold light anomaly, this could be an awesome thing for science, dudes! I mean it! From beer coolers to cryogenic weapo... I mean tech. But then again, she is rather reclusive... Self isolated even. And how can't she create another sapient being, but can make regular animals?

I am gonna just send over this dossier on her to our scientists."-Shawn Bjomson
