Yeah, that's a crime... But it's not very serious or with a relevant penalty. In reality, the penal code provides for up to 6 months in jail on parole. But in most cases, the judge ends up sentencing to a sentence of 3 months of social services in freedom.

Promoting a dangerous ideology like Communism or Nazism?

It depends on which dangerous ideology the criminal holds. Those on the left side of the political spectrum would face immediate public execution. Meanwhile, promoting right-wing dangerous ideologies isn't a crime in Kaywell.

Intentionally switching places with a criminal in order to be punished in the criminal's place?

The "punishment" is immediately being considered "Honoratus Amicus" - a friend of the cartel. We will try our best to make their sentence as short and painless as possible, and give them all kinds of fun employment options, both while behind bars and for after they get out.

They've also got themselves on the fast track to being considered a candidate to become "Latro" - a made man. We will keep a close eye on them, but if we can do some deep background checks to verify that they have never been a lawman, they will already be considered to have "locked in" by doing time. We might want to make sure they still have some spots on the old criminal record, just to be sure they aren't undercover, but they've already earned our respect.

Anyone willing to do time in place of a criminal is someone we want to be close friends with. They are not to be punished by us, but are a valuable friend to the noble pursuit of crime. After all, our oath says "I will honor my fellow criminal."

What is YN's punishment for giving no less than $10 mil. of funding to known terrorists?
